FAVOURITE BRITISH FINCHES.

The Twite and the Greenfinch are great favourites with keepers of British birds, and fine specimens are to be seen at any of our shows. The Twite at the top of our picture won 2nd prize at East Ham Combined Show for Mr. W. Priseman, Poplar, and the Greenfinch is the winner of 1st prize at Queen's Park Show. It is owned by Mr. W. Clark, Westbourne Park.

F. CARL, Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Advertisement Charges.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and are charged at two words a penny up to 48 words; after that 1d. per word. No single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 9d. 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, 2/6, according to size.

The rate for displayed advertisements is 7/6 per inch. Rates for a series on application.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona-fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller statiug what it is he requirco sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his uame and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transactiou has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

6.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transactiou, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

HEALTHY BIRDS

That is what every fancier wants, and can have by using Ditchfield's Bird Medicines. We don't want you to make your bird-room a doctor's shop, but we do advise you to keep a bottle of Ditchfield's Medicine there.

DITCHFIELD'S TONIC DROPS.

are a guaranteed cure for Not Singing, Soft Moult, Slow Moult, Going Light, Feather Plucking, Dulness, and Inflammation of the Bowels. Also if you are having bad luck with your young birds try our Tonic Drops; they prevent Going Light, and aid digestion so common with young birds. Ditchfield's Tonic Dreps are undoubtedly the grandest Pick-me-up ever introduced for young birds. They are invaluable when getting them on hard seed.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO.

is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to birds, and for producing that smart, tight appearance of plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

The above two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into first-class condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC.

for all Chest and Lung Affections in Cage Birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak and delicate birds.

DITCHFIELD'S DIARRHŒA POWDERS

for all classes of cage birds is safe and effective and gives instant relief. A pleasant, safe remedy that can be fully relied upon. For young birds these Powders are absolutely unequalled.

All the above remedies are sold in 8d., 1/2 and 2/2 bottles; two 8d. bottles for 1/2, three for 1/8; two 1/2 bottles for 1/11. three for 2/8; two 2/2 bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, and are sent away POST FREE per return from:—

FRANK DITCHFIELD, BIRD SPECIALIST, OLDHAM.

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once, 2½d post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased at from 5/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell No. 20," 2½d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

Club Reports.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

At next meeting, Deansgate Hotel, July 17, we are having a Nest Feather Table Show and Judging Competition. Two classes for Yorks; yellow and buff. Mr. T. Atkinson, one of our old members, will judge Yorks., and offers 2s. 6d. for most entries, not less than three, in Yorkshire section. Mr. F. Wilkinson will judge Norwich classes, yellow and buff; and Mr. A. G. Smith British, A.V. A hearty invitation is given to anyone who would like to be with us at 8.30.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

HALIFAX C.B.S.

On July 6 at the Trafalgar Inn, King's Cross, Mr. M. J. Chittenden, Manningham, gave a lecture on Yorkshire Canaries. There was a splendid attendanee of members and friends to hear a very interesting and instructive lecture. He dealt with all points from buying stock, keeping and feeding through the winter, pairing up, sitting, hatching, rearing, showing, moulting, and ailmente, and how to treat. All which were given from his own experience. Many questions were put and all were quickly and satisfactorily answered. Best thanks were accorded to the lecturer who returned thanks to all.—A. Sutcliffe, Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting, July 8, to elect a judge for N.F. show, July 29. Sec. shifted our show date from July 15 to 29 to suit South Moor, and all were in favour of alteration. For our annual schedule we are running a yellow hen and buff, if there are five in each section; if not they run together; also young Mule or Hybrid, Redpoll, £1 selling pair, and 10s. single, without cage, and a cinnamon or green foul hen. Last year we had 46 classes, and we are now putting on 11 more. There is a novice class in each section, and a novice pool. All the sections go together. One of our members has gone to the front as chaplain, and his birds will be shown in his name at Pelton. We have three members now at the front. Our N.F. in the last issue of "Cage Birds" was timed at 2 o'clock instead of 12. Anyone wishing to become a member can have a schedule by applying to Sec. Subs. 5/- year.—J. Stanger, Sec. 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, S.O., Co. Durham.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A

General meeting July 4, St. Thomas's School, Ardwick. Rev. J. W. Wragg presided over a good muster. After the usual business, which included the nomination of two more new members. A paper was read on the "Norwich Canary," by Mr. J. Beswick (Stockport). Commencing with the novice starting in the Fancy, the kind of birds to purchase, cages, etc., the general management through the winter months, during breeding season, moulting, and colour-feeding, he dealt with the Norwich when he started in the Fancy 22 years ago and the present-day Norwich. At the conclusion of the paper many questions were asked and he answered them as only those that have had a great amount of experience in the Fancy can do. Not only the novice gained useful information, but the older fanciers were being educated in the lecture. Those who did not attend missed an opportunity of learning something that would have greatly assisted them in their hobby. A vote of thanks concluded a very interesting and instructive evening.—J. Spencer.

SOUTHERN BORDER F.C.

Meeting headquarters June 26. Mr. H. Norman chair. Owing to so few members attending very little business could be done. The Club's patronage bas so far been given to Cheltenham, Crystal Palace and Penge, Cardiff and Llanelly. It is hoped we shall bo able to fix up with one more London and one more provincial club. Further particulars and list of specials to be competed for will appear shortly. I thank those members who have subscribed to the Specials Fund, and hope to hear from more. Members please let me have their advertisements for the Manual, which must go to the printers within the next few days. I also beg to remind members that subs. are due, and that if not paid before Aug. 1 members will be debarred from competing for specials. Next meeting will be announced in CAGE BIRDS.—Geo. Burton.

LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, July 1, Griffin Hotel, Mr. F. Heaton presiding over a full house, every seat being occupied, which goes to prove that we have only to make our meetings interesting to get members to attend, even in the summer time. After the ordinary business had been got through the members settled down to hear the translations from prominent German breeders, kindly lent by Mr. T. W. Walton and ably read by Mr. A. E. Montague, on the training of the Roller Canary for contest singing, after which the meeting resolved itself into a debate in respect to certain things mentioned in the paper. Many questions were asked and answered to the satisfaction of all present, and a vote of thanks was proposed to the two above mentioned gentlemen for services rendered. Agreed to have the August meeting on the last Saturday in July on account of the holidays.—H. Best, Sec.

Y.C.C. PATRONAGE, 1916-17.

Committee meeting, July 8, Mr. H. H. Towers, president, in chair. New members admitted, Mr. G. S. Williams, Hawarden, and Mr. J. Lunn, Bradford. Competitions for 1916-17, The Ogden Trophy, value 10 guineas; Dykes' competition, value 7 guineas, as 1st prizes. The Club will, in addition, give prizes value 30s., 20s., and 10s. and 2nd and 3rd and 4th prizes in each competition. Amateur competition value 21s. 1st, 15s. 2nd, 10s. 3rd, 6s. 4th prizes; Junior novice competition, value 21s. 1st prize, 15s. 2nd, and 10s. for 3rd. Cash prizes at each show for most points gained by 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th birds. The following shows were successful in the draw for Club's patronage:—Oct. 14, City of Bradford, judge not yet decided; Oct. 21, Bradford (West), judge Mr. F. Self; Sheffield O.S., Nov. 3 and 4, W. A. Cowgill; Ardwick and Manchester, Nov. 11, C. A. House; Huddersfield, Nov. 18, J. W. Metcalfe; Windhill, Dec. 2, E. Clegg; Bradford (East), Dec. 16, H. J. Chittenden; Halifax C.B.A., Dec. 23, A. Radley; Shipley O.S., Jan. 6, 1917; T. Bennett; and Skelmanthorp, Jan. 13, A. Hirst. The following generously contributed towards the club's prize lists: Mr. H. H. Towers (president) 21s.; Mr. W. A. Cowgill, 15s.; Messrs. Myers and Thornton, 15s.; W. B. Atkinson, 10s. 6d.; C. Morrison, 10s.; L. C. Casey, 10s.; E. Clegg, 10s.; H. J. Chittenden, 6s. Fanciers desiring to become members of the Y.C.C. should send name and address along with 2s. 6d. annual sub., to the Sec. as early as possible for inclusion in the list of members in the Club's Handbook, which will be issued shortly.—John Greaves, Sec., 279, Hollings Road, Bradford.

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Meeting headquarters, July 1. Mr. A. Forman (Vice-chair) presided over an extra large turn-out. The principal business was fixing up the classification for Annual Show. It was decided to allow the Norwich classes to remain as before, and to add four novice classes to that section. Borders get 1 class extra and 2 novice classes, Yorks. 1 extra and 2 novice classes, British 4 extra, Mules 1 extra. All other confined classes to remain as before. This brings the confined classes up to a total of 67. Decided to allow novices to compete in champion classes with same exhibit as entered in novice sections. This is a very extensive classification for novices, but a much needed one, and it is hoped that beginners in the hobby will appreciate same. Mr. Robert Jeffrey promised to give a gold medal for the best young bird bred by a novice, and Mr. J. Urquhart a silver medal to runner up. New member admitted: Mr. George Ingles, 62, Florance-st., S.S. During the meeting our F.F. Show birds were being judged in another room by Mr. Peter Houston, and a very big task he had before him, especially in Norwich, where the classes were very large and some very fine birds were exhibited. Mr. Jas. Kerr's clear yellow cock carried off the premier honour and club special for best bird in hall. This is a very nice youngster and should take some stopping. Nor., Cl. or Tkd. Yell. (10): 1, 2, spls., Jas. Kerr; 2, spl., Hardie; 3, Mason; 4, Forman; vhc, spl, Hunter; hc, Knox; c, Gilmour. Buff (15): 1, 2, 4, Cairns; 3, hc, spl., Halliday; vhc, Ross; c, Gilmour. Variegated or Green Yell. (12): 1, spl., Hardie; 2 Hamilton; 3, Stewart; 4, hc, spl., Urquhart; vhc. spl., Robertson; c, McLuskie. The Young Bird Shows.

NOTE.—Secretaries will greatly facilitate the work of ourselves and our printers if they will kindly endeavour to send their reports as nearly as possible as they see these accounts printed, and if they will also write the names of exhibitors as distinctly as possible.

CITY OF BELFAST NORWICH, CREST, & Y.C.C

Third Annual N.F. Show, July 1, Clarence-place Hall, May-st. Entries were a long way down from last year, but what was short in quantity was fully made up in quality. Some very nice youngsters were staged, and these should give a good account of themselves after the moult. Mr. Carson judged, and seemed to give entire satisfaction. Nor., Cl. or Tkd. BARROW-IN-FURNESS.

Notwithstanding the fact that many of the local fanciers have been working heavily on munitions, and have had little time to attend to bird matters, the show of the Barrow C.B.S., held in the Dalton Road School, July 8, was a great success, the entry totalling just over 200, the quality being exceedingly good, and the attendance very gratifying. Last year the society contributed £24 to the war funds from its two shows, and the members are hoping to do as well again this year. Yorks. were a fine upstanding, well-drawn lot, without a single coarse exhibit, whilst the Borders were really wonderful, especially the buffs. Twenty-five young buff Borders was a class to test any judge, and Mr. House felt it a bit stiff. Mr. Shackley should be proud of his 1st and 2nd in such a class. Mr. Higgins won the cup for best in the show bar Borders, with a topping Yorks., and the Border cup went to Mr. Large, the president, with a sweet little four-pointed hen. Mr. Morgan won the special best novice with his 2nd yellow varieg. Yorks.; we congratulate him on his luck, and wish him further success. Points special in British went to Messrs. Morello and Son, who staged a grand team. All the arrangements were well carried out by the committee under the superintendence of Mr. Large, the president, whilst Mr. McFarlane as secretary is just the man for the job. We were pleased to see Mr. G. Wilson about again, and to hear that he is feeling much better; still we thought he looked far from strong. Mr. C. A. House judged Canaries except Cinnamons and A.O.V., and Mr. G. Wilson the remainder.

ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

A FINE SHOW IN SYDNEY.

Twenty-second annual show, Waking House, Sydney, May 12 and 13. This year's show proved one of the best for years past; entries were well above the figures of the last year or two, and quality in every section was also a decided improvement. The members have issued a book of standards for the various breeds of Canaries, and all seem very enthusiastic in trying to breed as near the adopted standards as possible, and woe betide the judge who doesn't keep up-to-date and give his awards accordingly. Mr. Earle, Chairman, and Mr. Saunders, Hon. Sec., acting with a hard working and enthusiastic committee comprising Messrs. Moyle, Frevail, Coupland, Lipscombe, Hinckman, and Osborne, all did yeoman service to make the show a great success, and it is very gratifying to record that their efforts met with success. There were many birds of exceptional merit in every section, and the show was better patronised by the public, a good crowd being present on each day. Judges: Scotch Fancies, Crest and C.B., and Self Cinnamons, Mr. T. Inglis; Yorks., and A.O.V., J. Currah; Norwich, H. Dunlop; Brit., H. Piers.

BIRDS, INSECTS AND BIRD-NESTING.

AN article by "Cosmopolitan" in the London "Sportsman" of June 30, under the heading of "Gun, Rod and Hound," furnishes some very interesting reading. Some of the conclusions may be open to controversy, but that does not detract from the general interest of the matter. Referring to migrant birds the author says: "Most of the small British nesting migrants, called summer migrants, fulfil in a remarkable manner the definition already given of an ideal vermin killer. It is true that the best of them live on nothing else but vermin (insects), and so are unable to kill to extermination and still go on living with us. That is the reason why they have to move on, and continue to find new places where their food is in plenty. It happens that just at the time when insects are most plentiful the young of the summer migrants multiply in number in our midst by five to twenty-fold at one nesting, and that which one pair could do to destroy insects is multiplied many times. I cannot say how many, because that would involve considerations of how many times in the season the old birds nest.

"Then, when they have taken all they can for three months, or five, as the case may be, winter comes along and finds them otherwise provided for overseas.

"The birds migrate in their own interests, not intentionally in ours; that is, not unless the great wheel-within-wheel machine which helps the world to go round is all part and parcel of a providential unity of purpose, one which can be mistaken for individual purpose when the purpose is universal and the individual but a part of it.

"If this is so, it does not follow that the destruction of half, or three-quarters, of the migrants in their passage out of this country would be a loss to us or a loss at all. As long as the birds are here in multiplied numbers just when they are necessary to our vegetable products, it does not matter for our material benefit that they should be given safe passage to lands we know nothing of. It would be just the same to us whether they bred here and wintered elsewhere as whether they bred here and died in going elsewhere.

"Nature has no sentiment, and she kills for a utility purpose. If one stops to consider what would happen to the migrants if they did not mostly die on their passages we should have to admit that they would multiply at a rate at which the insect food would give out.

"But they do not multiply; the stock here one summer, and the young stock bred here, are year by year about the same. No man takes toll of these insect feeders; they are marvellously fast breeders, and, having bred and eaten, their work in the world is done, unless they survive the double migration. If they all did that then the insects here would have to multiply in similar proportion.

"Obviously, with the first multiplication of the birds that possibility would be closed down, so that it follows that either the migrants must perish by the dangers of travel or else they must starve when they return to us in these multiplied numbers. They do not starve, and they do not multiply, and consequently I think, it follows that they drown.

"So it happens that when thoughtless boys go birds' nesting, and take the eggs that please them regardless of the species, they are doing as much harm as the insectivorous birds' young ones would have done good. Nor is it any excuse that there are so many of them that the eggs taken will be no loss. If, instead, they allowed the young to hatch and feed and then caught them on the eve of migration the loss would be less and perhaps little or nothing, because something that we know little or nothing about regulates the supply of young birds to our demands for insect killers. To destroy a nest is to permit the multiplication by this time next year of hundreds of millions of insects, the produce of parents that nature intended to be eaten without breeding."

Twitterings.

Mr. A. McLean, Larkhall, writes that he has changed his address from Strutherhill to 71, Raploch Street, Larkhall.

Mr. H. Eastwood, hon. sec., writes that Burnley O.S. has decided to introduce some open classes at its annual members' show.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Open Norwich Plainhead Club should apply before July 22 to S. Wilcock, 16, Back Manor Street, Eccleshill, Bradford.

Mr. Geo. Greenwell, Sec. of the Wallsend C.B.A., writes that Northern fanciers will be welcome at the Nest Feather Show of the society at the Co-operative Hall, Carville Road. The show is open from 2.30 till 7.30. Mr. Crawhall, Newcastle, judges.

Societies in the Northern counties of England who are desirous of obtaining the patronage of the Northern Border Fancy C.C. are requested to make their application as early as possible to C. Farrer, Hon. Sec., 222, Jefferson Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The London and Counties A.C.B. is holding its annual young bird show on Saturday, July 15, at Victoria Hotel, Charterhouse Street, E.C. Judge, Mr. J. Robson. Admission is free; the show opens at 6.30.

From what we could learn at Barrow on Saturday the breeders of the Furness district have not had a good breeding season. The majority of them have been so busy on munitions that they have not been able to give their birds proper attention, added to which the weather has been most unseasonable. We heard of one fancier who has actually finished the breeding season with nine birds less than the number he started with.

Pray accept my very sincere thanks (writes Mr. M. S. Runchman) for the excellent portrait of my Yellow Cinnamon Yorkshire appearing on the front page of this week's issue of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. The bird mentioned (Marquis) has some very promising youngsters, some of which I trust may one day be considered deserving of the honour now paid to their father. Best thanks to Mr. Norman, and all good wishes to CAGE BIRDS.

Cinnamon Canaries.

In my letter in last issue on this subject the words "Cinnamon Norwich or Roller" in last sentence should be "common Norwich or Roller," writes Mr. Claude St. John.

A GOOD POST VACANT.

THE position of Organising Secretary to the Canary Supply Organisation Association, the committee meetings of which are held weekly at CAGE BIRDS Offices, 154, Fleet Street, has not yet been filled. In view of the fact that details of the scheme were to be published in our issue of this week, it was decided to leave the applications open for consideration at the next meeting, Monday, July 17. Our offer of last week still remains open, therefore, and the Editor will be pleased to receive applications for submission to the committee at the next meeting.

OBITUARY.

Mr. W. S. RYDER and Mr. W. PAWLEY (Plymouth).

It is with deepest sympathy, writes Mr. W. A. Dyer, Hon. Sec., Plymouth and W. Counties O.S., that I have to announce the death of two of our members, Messrs. W. S. Ryder and W. Pawley. Fanciers all the time; always on top to lend a hand or to help a good cause; the sort of men who leave a blank which it is hard to fill. Our sincere and deepest sympathy is extended to the widows.

Mr. J. R. LEECH (Abertillery).

It is with deep regret, writes Wm. Newell, Hon. Sec. Abertillery C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the death of Abertillery's oldest fancier, Mr. Joseph R. Leech. Mr. Leech was 58 years of age, a native of Drayton, Shropshire, and came to Abertillery 30 years ago. He was for many years a Lizard breeder, and turned out some of the best. Although he had not kept birds for a number of years, he was always willing to give a helping hand to the Fancy, and gave many silver cups for competition known as the Leech's cups. He was a well-known figure at Crystal Palace shows, and was always willing to officiate as judge at local shows. He will be greatly missed, and I am sure that all who knew him will join with the Abertillery C.B.S. in tendering their deepest sympathy to his wife and family.

The opening article in the July issue of the Avicultural Magazine, the Journal of the Avicultural Society, is a reprint from "Bird Lore" of an article by the Editor, Mr. F. M. Chapman, on the work of Louis Agassiz Fuertes, painter of bird portraits; this is illustrated by reproductions of two paintings by the Greek artist named. Mr. F. E. Blaauw contributes notes on the birds near Oudtshoorn, Cape Colony. Capt. B. E. Potter tells of "Birds in Macedonia," and there is a reprint from "The Emu," entitled Reminiscences of a Field Collector, by Mr. A. J. Campbell, of Melbourne. The item of most practical interest is the "Monthly Notes" by "Secretarius," a new feature of the Magazine.

Pudding Dishes as Nest Boxes.

We are breeding such a lot of birds in Mansfield, writes a Mansfield reader, that a fancier has to use a pudding dish instead of a nest box.

"Cage Birds" in Australia.

Our representative in Australia, Mr. J. Currah, Marian Street, Killara, Sydney, will be pleased to give enquirers any information possible, and will book orders for serial subscriptions, to our journal.

An Open Show for Aberdeen.

At a meeting of the Aberdeen Amalgamated Cage Bird Society, on July 7, writes Mr. R. J. Robertson, Sec., the members unanimously agreed to hold an open show, but the date and nature of show was deferred till the next meeting of the society, Sept. 29.

A NEW FEATURE IN "CAGE BIRDS."

WE have decided to offer weekly a prize of half a guinea for the best answer to a question propounded. The questions will vary from week to week to cover all branches of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the continuance of the idea will depend upon its reception by our readers. What is uppermost in our minds at the moment is the great future which seems to await the Canary industry in our country, and the question this week will be "What do you think of the Co-operative scheme set forth on page 397?"

Opinions for or against may be freely expressed, and suggestions for its betterment, either in detail or as a whole, may be sent. The prize of half-a-guinea will be awarded to the reply which is the best in the opinion of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS, and his decision must be accepted as final. CAGE BIRDS reserves the right to publish any or all of the answers sent in.

Replies must be addressed to the Editor CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Sreet, London, E.C., to reach the office not later than the first post on Tuesday, July 18, and must be accompanied by a coupon cut from this issue. The coupon appears this week at the foot of this page.

The next question will be "What is your favourite Canary, and why?" Answers to this question must be accompanied by a coupon which will be published in our issue of July 22, and must reach us not later than the first post Tuesday, July 25.

This competition is quite distinct from the one announced in our issue of last week and for which we are offering six guineas in prizes.

Boy Bird-nester Punished.

At Ashton Police Court a boy of 15 was severely reprimanded by the magistrates and ordered to pay 5s. 6d. costs for having in his possession a Linnet's nest with two young which he said he was "taking home to put in a cage."

Norwich P.H.C. Annual Meeting.

There will be a general meeting of members on July 22 at 3 o'clock at the Joiners' Arms Hotel, Deansgate, Bolton, and I hope, writes Mr. Jno. Hopkins, Hon. Sec., as many members as possible will attend as there will be some important business.

When a Rook is Not a Crow.

The London "Times" of June 26 says: "A fledgling Crow, which fell from its nest in a Sheffield rookery, has been fostered by the wounded soldiers at Sheffield Base Hospital as their mascot." This is all right for the fledgling, and we wish the soldiers luck with their mascot. Nevertheless, Crows do not build in rookeries.

QUARRELSOME TRAVELLERS.

THOUGH both in summer and winter Meadow Pipits are among the commonest objects of our countryside, there is an interval, from about the middle of August to the middle of September, when we appear to have none at all; and then suddenly comes a day when, with a strong north wind blowing certain sheltered slopes are covered with a multitude of Meadow Pipits. The air is filled with their piping, and they may be seen chasing each other in every direction. They have evidently come from oversea with the north wind, and have alighted in the first sheltered but open space which they found. Their quarrelsomeness forbids, however, that they should remain in company. Unlike the Skylarks, naturally as quarrelsome as birds can be, the migrating Meadow Pipits cannot afford to sink their differences, because they feed only upon insect food all the winter. The Skylarks' stouter digestions enable them to picnic comfortably upon a field of clover. When the weather is hard they will even devour rye-grass like the wild geese, or turnip leaves like the Woodpigeons; but clover seems to be their favourite vegetable, and when we have weeks of frosty weather, on clover fields that slope to the south, where the mid-day winter sun melts most of the snow away, the farmer would almost need a microscope sometimes to see where his clover grows.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long, practical experience. Terms moderate.

THOS. BENNETT, Judge of Cage Birds; life experience; terms moderate: 14, Cumberland-rd., Lidget Green, Bradford.

J. W. BRUCE, Coldstream. Judge of all varieties of cage birds; Border and British Bird specialist. Terms moderate.

W. A. COWGILL, 115, Washington Street, Girlington Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

GEO. GARDNER, 11, Haverstock Road, London, N.W. Judge of all kinds of Cage Birds.

G. HOBBS, 35, Queen's Road, Northampton, having retired from business, can judge Canaries and cage birds. 40 years breeder and exhibitor. Terms moderate.

J. HOLROYD, 27, Kingswood St., Gt. Horton, Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

J. R. HOUGHTON, 21, Hatfield Road, Gloucester; judge of Canaries and Cage Birds; specialist in Norwich; terms moderate.

C. A. HOUSE, Briardene, Idle, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and other Cage Birds.

J. W. METCALFE, Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool. Judge of Cage Birds, Specialist Yorks. and Norwich; terms moderate.

W. MUNDELL, 6, Carlisle Place, Manningham, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds.

H. NORMAN, The Eyrie, Salisbury Road, Carshalton, Surrey. All varieties of Cage Birds. Specialist Hybrids and British Birds.

J. PATTERSON, Chirnside. Judge of Cage Birds; all varieties. Wide, practical experience. Specialist Border Fancy Judge.

J. H. PAYNE, 17, Northgate Street, Gloucester, Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Cage Birds.

C. E. SILK, The Aviaries, Emsworth, Hants. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Life experience.

JAMES STANGER, 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, Co. Durham. A.V., Spl., Nor. and Cr.

HENRY TAMS, Orchard Place, Longton, Staffs. Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Birds. Twenty-five years' Breeder and Exhibitor.

S. TICKELL, 22, Honey Street, Bodmin. Judge of all varieties; specialist Norwich, Cinn. and Liz. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. VARDY, The Aviaries, Bucknall Buthwaite, Notts. Judge of all varieties; specialist in Norwich Plainheads. Life experience. Terms moderate.

J. WILCOCK, The Fountain Inn, Eccleshill, nr. Bradford. Judge of Cage Birds, all varieties

G. WILSON, 14, Frizington Rd., Frizington, Cumberland. Judge of Mules, Brit., For. Specialist, Brit., Mules. Life experience; terms moderate.

W. YOUNG, 25, Grosvenor Road, New Brighton. Judge of Cage Birds. Life experience. Terms moderate.

The Nightingale in Yorkshire.

According to Mr. T. H. Nelson, says the "Newcastle Chronicle," the Nightingale is seen year after year in certain secluded but more or less smoke-begrimed woodlands of the Yorkshire coalfield, in some instances scarcely beyond the hum and racket of the pit bank, as in the neighbourhood of Barnsley, Wakefield, and Ackworth as well as pleasanter habitats in the neighbourhood of the picturesque Abbey of Roche. In the Central Plain, it is regularly noted in the districts of Selby, Goole, York, Harrogate, and Boroughbridge; and in Holderness, in localities between Patrington and the Humber northward and eastward to Beverley.

A Bird of the Mountain Streams.

An interesting article in the "Westminster Gazette" of July 8 concludes as follows:—

"The Dipper is much more constant to streams than even the Kingfisher, for the latter bird will frequently avail itself of short cuts, and will wing its way over land to a new fishing station, but the Dipper will always wing its way along the bed of the stream, no matter how tortuous the windings are, and no matter how small the bridges, it will shoot through with a swift flight that reminds one very much of the Kingfisher's.

"The food is sought for beneath the water in a most extraordinary fashion, for the bird can walk quite a fair distance beneath the surface by clinging to the stones at the bottom of the stream and picking up aquatic insects and soft-shelled molluscs.

"It is not always necessary for the stream to be shallow for him to do this, for he can drive himself through the water with his short wings and can reach the bottom of the larger pools where he can cling and walk about just as easily as in the shallow rapids. He is a thorough adept in this element, and is more expert than the Kingfisher.

"The Kingfisher is a wonderful diver, diving with a surprising accuracy after the small fish, but the Dipper is a surf swimmer in miniature, and a diver as well. He can dive from almost any position, he can float down stream, and can disappear beneath the surface in a flash, or whilst flying over the water he can alight and plunge almost in one movement."

"CAGE BIRDS" PRIZE QUESTION COUPON,

The Organisation of the Canary Supply.

Co-operation for Canary Breeders.

A Practical Scheme of Working Suggested.

A MEETING of the Committee which has in hand the question of organising the Canary supply in our own country in order to meet the demand at home and in the Colonies and the United States which has hitherto been largely the monopoly of the World's enemies, the Germans, was held at CAGE BIRDS Offices, 154, Fleet Street, on July 10.

Present: Mr. H. J. Fulljames (Cage Birds League), in the chair, and Messrs. G. Crabb (London and P.O.S.), H. W. Gutierrez (British Roller C.C.), J. Jeffrey (Metropolitan C.B.A.), D. Reeks (Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.), and W. H. Vale (Clapham C.B.A.).

Correspondence was read from Messrs. Kuhliger, Kybert, Last, and Ramsden.

On the question of the adoption of a title by the Association, the Chairman suggested "The Canary Supply Co-operative Association," and, after a little general discussion, it was proposed by Mr. Jeffrey, seconded by Mr. Reeks, and carried unanimously, to so name the organisation.

The Chairman read a scheme of organisation on co-operative lines, which had been prepared by the retiring Secretary. This was fully considered by the members present, and was agreed to be eminently practicable. It was decided, however, to post a copy to each of the absent members of the Committee for consideration, and to publish the scheme in CAGE BIRDS, in order that the Canary breeders throughout the country should have an opportunity of examining the same, and of expressing their views in the matter by letter.

The scheme, as it stands at present, is purely a tentative one, but it outlines broadly a method by which every Canary breeder may help to forward the work which is in hand, and, at the same time, may join in all the benefits which cannot fail to follow its successful initiation.

It shows how even on a turnover of only 50,000 British Canaries a sound profit may be made after meeting all possible working expenses. Twenty years ago the annual export from Germany to this country and elsewhere was estimated to amount to five times this number, and there is little doubt that the demand has been constantly increasing, until half a million annually would probably be well within the number of Canaries for which a market exists at present.

This demand could be supplied by British breeders, not perhaps in the first year, but within a very few years. It is at least certain that a market is waiting for every Canary which Britain can produce. All that is needed is efficient organisation. The first steps toward such an organisation have now been taken, and it is for the fanciers of Great Britain to say whether they will take a share in making our country the World's market for singing Canaries.

They can do this by increasing their own production, spreading the knowledge of Canary breeding among those who do not know of its possibilities, and lending a helping hand to beginners in the hobby which has afforded themselves in the past a pleasurable occupation for their spare time, and which is so easily turned to profitable and patriotic ends.

By taking shares in the Association, which is now being suggested to them, they can place it in a position to get on with the work, their money will come back with a profit such as it would only earn under a system of mutual help and co-operation, the profit will be continuous, and will increase, and purchasers of singing Canaries will be supplied with healthy and beautiful songsters instead of the miserable and unhealthy wasters which they have been forced to accept from the Germans. The members will make an individual first profit on every bird they sell to the Association, and every penny earned by the Association over and above the cost of working will return to them in the shape of dividends.

If the number of members does not almost from the beginning very greatly exceed the one thousand estimated by the scheme as it stands at present, then the Canary breeders of Great Britain do not know a good thing when they see it.

THE SCHEME AND ITS POSSIBILITIES.

IN response to the wish of the committee I have drawn up the following notes on the organisation of the Canary breeding supply, which the committee have been considering for some weeks. The object of this scheme, as drawn, is not to make definite and final propositions, but to give the committee some approximate data upon which they may base discussion with a view to the construction of a permanent scheme.

The figures do not pretend to be exact, they are merely suggestive, and must be verified and adjusted to suit the purposes of the committee as discussion develops.

I have come to the conclusion that the only satisfactory way to set about this work is to start a co-operative productive society, operating, in the first instance, entirely from London. Subsequently, as the scheme grows, it will be quite possible to organise branches in the more important centres of the British Isles, but the conclusions given herein deal chiefly with the initial experiment.

The suggestions really embody what may be described as a combination of two systems of co-operative effort—the productive system as practised on the Continent, and the distributive system which has been such a success in England, especially in the Northern counties.

To begin operations, I think it will be necessary to have a depot in London, or, preferably, in the country near to London, with a manager, who should be expert in the handling, packing, and export of birds. The organising secretary should have an office in London, and the depot manager should be subordinate to him. The organising secretary should give his whole time, and devote himself largely to the spreading of the movement throughout the British Isles, and the encouragement of Canary breeding amongst all classes, and especially amongst the working population; he should also devote himself to the discovery of markets, and in this matter he ought to have the assistance of the depot manager.

The question of finance is dealt with below, but the general scheme would involve a membership and membership fees, also a charge of a percentage on the turnover for the benefit of the General Fund. (See Note.) All surplus funds should be invested to the credit of the general association, and be returnable to members, less deductions for depreciation and extension, in the form of annual dividends Members should be allowed to leave their dividends to remain and accumulate at interest if they so desired.

The association should be governed by a Board meeting elected quarterly by members. The members of the Board should be paid a small remuneration and travelling expenses. A balance-sheet should be issued to the members once a year.

Possible First Year's Expenditure.

To arrive at the financial situation I propose to set out the possible expenses involved in inaugurating the scheme, and for this purpose I have allowed what I consider to be a wide margin of safety in every case.

Rent of Office	£50	0	0	per annum.
Rent of Depot	70	0	0	per annum.
Fitting of Office and Depot in first instance	100	0	0
Salary of Organising Secretary	250	0	0	per annum.
Salary of Depot Manager	120	0	0	per annum.
Assistants, at first ...	100	0	0	per annum.
Total, first year	£1,190	0	0

The incidental expenses have been put at a lump sum to meet all possible contingencies; they would probably be much less.

To meet this expenditure I propose that a membership fee of £1 should be charged; it is quite possible, of course, that poorer members might not be able to find that sum, and to make it easy for them, I would suggest that they should be asked to pay 2s. 6d. on entry, the remainder of the money to be collected from the results of the sales of their birds.

The privileges of membership would include advice, legal and otherwise, market for stock, interest on money contributed, assistance in the purchase of stock in deserving cases, etc.

Preferential Terms to Cage Bird Societies.

In order to increase interest and to stimulate the societies to obtain new members, I would suggest that a society might enter on the following basis:—

Not less than 20 members	£10

The collection of this money would be made by the Treasurer of the society, and should be paid in bulk to the General Committee, thus avoiding correspondence with the individual members. Under this plan I suggest a case in point: Supposing 15 or 16 members of a society wish to join the association, they would look about and obtain more members to complete the 20, when they would be able to obtain entry at half-price.

NOTE.—The purchase money received on birds of members sent through the depot would be subject to a deduction of 10 per cent.; this 10 per cent would go partly towards the working of the association, and any surplus would be returnable to members in the form of dividend. This subject requires careful discussion—it would be for the committee to decide whether the 10 per cent. should be on the whole of the purchase money or upon the purchase money less packing, etc. It will be possible for the committee to make the percentage such that it would cover all expenses.

A Modest Estimate of Income.

I suggest that the membership, properly worked, should produce £1,000, and the percentage on the sale of 50,000 birds, even at an average price of 5s. per bird, would be £1,250; thus we have £2,250 with which to meet expenses of £1,190, or a surplus of income over expenditure of £1,060 in the first year of working, and on a basis of only 50,000 birds at 5s. each.

I firmly believe that if the association is to be successful it must not confine itself to common singing birds, but must find a market, not only for such birds, but also for the high-class stock which it has been the custom to breed in England. If the high-class stock were excluded you would alienate the interest of a very large proportion of the breeders in this country. It has been clearly stated at a meeting of the committee and in CAGE BIRDS by experts that there is a good market for high-class birds, and that the supply is not equal to the demand. There is, therefore, no reason why the high-class birds should not come within the operations of this association, therefore I think I am justified in placing 5s. as a safe average per bird, because the high-class birds would bring pounds in many cases. The average would probably work out considerably higher; if so, so much the better for the members of the association.

The Trading Question.

In view of the suspicion which has been said to exist in the minds of some traders with regard to the aims of this committee, I think it very important that all organisation should be conducted with a view to include and assist the trade rather than to exclude them. There is absolutely no reason why the trade should not come into this movement and reap the same benefit from it that ordinary members may reap; for instance, it is quite possible that traders might find it convenient in certain circumstances to dispose of surplus birds through the association; on the other hand, it is quite possible that it might be convenient for the traders to obtain birds through the association when necessary. The question of membership should not prevent a tradesman from selling birds in the ordinary way in the open market. Membership would simply entitle him to reap any benefit from the association which might offer itself from time to time. As it has been clearly shown by dealers that the supply of birds in England is far below the demand, the object of the association in promoting the breeding of larger quantities of birds ought to assist the dealers rather than place obstacles in their way.

The essence of co-operation is mutual help—not competition. This association, to be successful, should not aim at competition with dealers, but should aim at mutual help amongst all classes of people who breed or deal in Canaries, and there is not the slightest reason why an association should not be successfully worked on those lines.

Rearing Insectivorous Birds.

SIR,—Do any of your readers know of any softbills which have been reared by their parents on artificial food? I think I have read of Nightingales having been bred in a cage and reared on egg and raw meat.

C. HARRISON.

The Plumage of the Red-beaked Weaver.

SIR,—In your issue of May 13 I see that your foreign bird specialist states of the Red-beaked Weaver, that, "In natural aviaries a few are reared annually." As that is so, the records may elucidate a point in which I am interested. Do the males assume their black face (or in the case of var. russi, the pink front) within twelve months of birth or later?

This particular reply commenced with the words, "I doubt if these birds will attempt to nest seriously in a cage." Might I suggest that the chances of this would, it seems to me, have been much more accurately stated by some such phrase as "It is a million to one against these birds attempting, etc."

Another Soldier Fancier Killed in the War.

Sergt.-Major Joseph Bowerbank.

SIR,—It was with much sorrow that we heard of the death of Sergt.-Major Joe Bowerbank. His wife was informed by the War Office that he had been seriously wounded in France on July 2, and she heard, a few days later, that he had died on July 4, and was buried with Military honours in the cemetery at Bailleul, in France.

For some years he was a member of Haltwhistle C.B.S., and during the three last years was our Vice-Chairman. He will be remembered as having been an exhibitor of British and Mules under the name of Bowerbank Bros.

Four years ago he had a trying experience, his house being caught in a fire which originated in a cycle shop, and he lost his furniture, birds, and everything, as he and his wife had only time to escape before the fire reached their rooms.

He was much respected both by fanciers and others in this district, and he will be a big loss to our society, as we could always rely on him to be there if there was any work to be done. He was also much thought of by the men of his Company, and four of them have sent instructions for a beautiful wreath to be sent out for his grave at their expense.

When the war broke out he was a member of the 4th Batt. Northumberland Fusiliers (Territorials), and was called to the Colours on August 5, 1914. After spending some time of hard training, he was despatched to France on April 20, 1915, and was rushed into the firing line four days later to help to stop the oncoming hordes of Germany, who had almost broken through the British lines. He was only a Sergeant when he went to France, but had been twice promoted on the field.

This is the second member of our society to pay the supreme sacrifice; he was only 26 years' old, and leaves a widow and one child four years old. The members of our society, and, I am sure, all who knew him, will join with me in expressing our deep sympathy with his widow, his mother, and all his relations.

WM. TALLANTYRE,
Sec., Haltwhistle C.B.S.

A Knotty Point.

SIR,—There is a little problem before the members of our society, and I should like a little advice. Is it fair to the Fancy at large that two fanciers breeding in the same room can show as champion and novice? I may say there are two men living in different houses, but they breed in the same room. One is a champion exhibitor, and the other is a raw novice. Can they breed as partners, and yet show separately as champion and novice?

WM. NEWELL.

[The generally accepted rule is that two or more exhibitors living in the same house must show under the status of the highest, and this rule would seem to cover the point of two people breeding birds in partnership, although they may actually sleep in different houses. They occupy the same premises for the purpose of breeding birds, and in our opinion they should both show as champions. Such points as these find a lucrative employment for lawyers, for of course they may be argued either way, in the letter or in the spirit. The society should pass a rule to meet the individual case.—ED. CAGE BIRDS.]

CORRESPONDENCE.

Nesting of the Redstart and Lapland Bunting.

Sir,—Mr Seth Smith has kindly consented to allow me to deposit for a short time in the Zoological Gardens a male and female Redstart, which have been two years in captivity, and a young bird, bred this season in my aviary, with their nest box, nest, and one egg. My object in doing this is, in the first place, to show that even the shyest of our Softbills can be bred in captivity, and, secondly, to induce others interested in Softbills to do the same. In this way they will make a record, help aviculture, and prove their knowledge of the subject more fully than by any number of words. The young bird is a smart little chap, as good as the two young Blackstarts bred here a few years since. I have also some young Laplands not yet fully reared.

W. E. Teschemaker.

The Leeds Roller C.C. and Canaries for Wounded Soldiers.

Sir,—I was very much surprised to receive a letter from you during the week to inform me that you had allotted three pairs of birds from the members of the Leeds Roller Canary Club to three of our wounded heroes. Now I am at a loss to know when I have given the number of pairs that could be expected from the Leeds Club. To the best of my knowledge I have never done so, because I should have been ashamed of the Leeds members only promising so few pairs, and I have not asked each individual member yet, as I thought to let them finish off with the breeding. No, sir, I think the Leeds members will do a lot better than that, or I am very greatly mistaken. Surely it is as little as we can do, especially if the Tommy is a true fancier, to see that something be done to satisfy his craving, and it is surprising that offers have not come forward better from the different Roller clubs. But, as I say, there is plenty of time yet, as we have not finished the present season yet.

H. Best, Hon. Secretary.

[The ex-Organising Secretary made, just before leaving, a list of offers up to date, and allocated them as far as they would go among the applicants on our list. We suppose he thought three pairs of Rollers as many as he could reasonably put down as a gift from the Leeds Roller Club, and we are very pleased indeed to find that this is not by any means as many as may be expected. We have many cases on our list which we have not yet been able to fill, and the larger number so kindly foreshadowed by Mr. Best will be very welcome.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

Profitable Canary Breeding.

The Colony v. the Cage System.

Sir,—To give my views on the breeding of Canaries for profit and to compare the cage system with the colony would involve quite a lengthy article, and I will endeavour to be concise as possible in dealing with the subject. As a breeder of some practical experience, I may say I have studied the question in every detail minutely, and in all its branches. Economy has always been my chief object, although, at the same time, to ensure success one must not be too near with the food bill.

Experience has taught me that our feathered pets do not require a lot of messes or coddling, and once the birds are thoroughly used to their surroundings and habitation they will stand almost any weather and climatic conditions; that is, of course, if they are bred to it.

Now in my humble opinion birds are far stronger and more vigorous for being bred in an outdoor building, providing that the building has plenty of ventilation, but you must avoid any trace of draughts. I do not attach much importance to the position of a birdroom so long as it gets a fair position of sun, but for preference I would have a building with a south-east aspect. Opinions differ to a very great extent as to which method would yield the most profit, so far as breeding in cages is concerned. Some fanciers will say any ordinary wooden box will do as long as you can attach a wire-front to it and whitewash it out. Personally I should like to know a fancier that could take the same interest and give the same attention to a room of white-washed soap-boxes as to one furnished with properly made and properly fitted cages. I could not for one, and I go as far as to state that without sufficient attention and interest you cannot ensure good results. I myself have already a large birdroom outdoors, and as I can see Germany being deprived of one of her large home industries, I hope to go in for Canary breeding on a much larger scale next season. The opportunity is ours if we grasp it in time; therefore I say, "Don't wait and see; be up and at it."

I myself would adopt the following methods: I hould not advocate the system of colony breeding, for it has a great many drawbacks attached to it, whilst its advantages would not correspond with the success obtained by breeding in cages. In my opinion the cage system would be the greater producer.

The kind of cage suitable would be 18in. by 15in. by 10in. deep, made of ¼in. pine, and with a three-ply back. To obtain this three-ply wood get a tea-chest from the grocer's; the cost is threepence, and one chest will be sufficient to make half a dozen backs. Place a bar 2in. wide 1in. from the bottom of the front of cage, to allow for a false tray bottom. A 12in. wire front with the supporting wires to go through the top of cage and also into the bottom rail. Have a door 5in. by 5in. in the centre of front, for easy access of a nest-pan, and place a perch on the second wire from each side of the door, and hang the nest in the centre of the back of the cage near the top. Enamel the interior white or any colour you may prefer, about three coats will be sufficient. I advise the bottom of cage to be enamelled at the same time, thus avoiding the moisture from the droppings penetrating into the wood and so preventing any undesirable smell. Now if you stain the outside black you have a cage which is absolutely sanitary, and which will always look nice if occasionally washed, whilst the cost of such a cage at the present time would be about half a crown, that is, of course, to make it yourself. If breeding entirely for profit I should dispense with seed-hoppers and have a glass or earthenware vessel placed near the front of cage, so that each vessel could easily be refilled from the outside with, say, a tin kettle. I should use the two holes usual in made fronts, one at each end, for water, for plenty of clean fresh water in the breeding season is of big importance. Eggs contain about 75 per cent. of water, thus if you do not see that birds have clean water you are minimising your chances of success. As an efficient breeding cage I cannot advise anything more suitable than the one I have described.

As regards the upkeep of a bird per week, this would entirely depend upon how many you were going to keep, as the larger the quantity of seed purchased the cheaper it would work out per bird. I myself have studied every detail for cheapness, subject to getting the maximum amount of success at the same time, and according to my figures the cost of seed, eggs, bread, greenfood, nest linings, cuttle-fish, etc., now runs out at just under one penny per bird per week right through the year; in ordinary times I daresay the cost would be a halfpenny. In conclusion I have no hesitation in advising anyone deciding to adopt Canary breeding for profit to ignore the colony system and to adhere strictly to cage methods. The reasons are: The hens are left to have quiet; there is no quarrelling over nests; steadier youngsters; greater produce per bird; no broken or spoilt eggs; the young are fed and looked after better; better care and attention can be given them; if any eggs are dropped from the hen they stand a better chance of not being broken; and, finally, the birds can be handled much more easily if such is necessary.

Two Kinds of Virginian Cardinals.

Sir,—I have been much interested in the correspondence recently appearing in your columns relating to Red or Virginian Cardinals.

I notice both Mr. Astley and Mr. Teschemaker appear to agree that there are only two races of Virginian Cardinals, viz., a large dark bird from the Southern States of America, and a smaller, brighter bird from Mexico, or thereabouts.

At the present moment, however, I have two pairs of these Cardinals which, while indistinguishable as regards size, show nevertheless such marked differences in other respects as seem to me to suggest that they may be representatives of different races. It struck me, therefore, that it might be of interest if I were to give a description, necessarily rather rough, as I have never actually caught and compared the birds closely, of their characteristics as they appear to me.

Pair No. I.: The cock of this pair is a brilliant coloured bird, one I selected out of a consignment of some 20 or 30 in 1913. The crest of this bird is erectile, and when in repose lies flat on the head; the beak is, as I think Dr. Butler aptly describes it, a bright sealing-wax red. The hen, an old bird, purchased seven or eight years ago, is a dull reddish-brown bird, with a similar crest to the cock. Both these birds were purchased from London dealers, but apart from this fact I have unfortunately no idea of their original home.

The song of the two cock birds varies quite as much as the plumage, and this I will endeavour to describe, though it is always, I think, a difficult matter to furnish a good idea of a bird's song translated into words. As near as possible I render the song variations of both species as follows:—

Song No. I. (bright red bird): First, slowly; "Tú-é," "Tú-é," "Tú-é." Then, very rapidly, "Hughie," "Hughie," "Hughie," "Hughie," this particular stanza being invariably followed by some curious chirping notes which I cannot describe better than by saying that they exactly resemble the quarrelling notes of Java Sparrows.

Song No. II. is difficult to render, but as near as possible I translate it as follows: First, slowly, "P-us," P-us," "P-us." Then rapidly, "Pews," "Pews," "Pews," "Pews."

Song No. III., which has also a variation, sounds to me exactly like the following sentence: Slowly, "You're a beast," "You're a beast," "You're a beast." Rapidly, "Beast," "Beast," "Beast," "Beast," "Beast." The variation sounds like "You're a beast," "Stupid beast," repeated sometimes for an hour or so on end.

Song No. II., until to-day, I had not heard since last year, and then only during the latter part of July up till about the middle of September, the last date I have any record of it being the 20th September.

I never could actually discover the singer. I last season came to the erroneous conclusion that it was my little Black Tanager, but, being followed as it always was by the "Java Sparrow" quarrelling notes, I know now that the singer must have been the Red Cardinal. The following is my rendering of it: Slowly, "Who are-you," "Who are-you," "Who are-you" (the "are-you" run into one). Rapidly, "Whit-ty Dick," "Whit-ty," "Whit-ty Dick" (repeat four times).

The next two variations are common to both birds, and in the first pair to both sexes.

Song No. V.: "Che-ow," "Chow," "Chow," "Chow" (rapidly repeated).

Song No. VI.: "Joey," "Joey," "Joey," etc., commencing at a high key and rapidly descending. (Scales practice!)

Pair No. II.: The cock of this pair I purchased privately last January. He is a much more soberly coloured bird than the other; his general effect above being a sort of pinkish-rose. The crest is rather longer, I should say, and is more or less fixed upright, and can never be depressed to lie flat on the head as in the other. The hen, bought in December, 1914, from a Birmingham dealer, is a much lighter shade than the other hen, more a sort of bay colour, and the crest, which is fixed, or practically so, is of a decidedly reddish tinge.

It would be quite impossible for the most unobservant person to confuse the two birds even if seen apart at different times. The cock of this pair is a far better and more melodious singer than the brighter coloured bird, and its stanzas are more varied. I will attempt to translate some of them as under.

First song variation: Leisurely, "See to it," "See to it," "See to it." Rapidly, and slurring the "I," "It's you," "It's you," "It's you" (usually repeated four time).

Second song variation: Leisurely, "Ho dear," "Ho dear," repeated for a considerable time.

Third song variation: "Ts-é-n," Ts-é-n." Repeat four times, and rapidly, "To-e," "To-e," four times, and follow the "Java Sparrow" notes referred to before.

There are two or three more song variations, but this selection, I think, will suffice here. There are, of course, the call notes proper, common to all four birds, consisting of a kind of metallic "click," "click," very similar to the sound produced by a Robin or a young Thrush.

It may interest readers to know that this latter pair has been at complete liberty since the middle of last June, and the cock (the hen is hardly ever to be seen) makes, as one can readily imagine, a very charming addition to the feathered inhabitants of the garden.

He seldom or ever strays beyond a radius of sixty or seventy yards, turns up regularly to breakfast, lunch, and dinner, with an occasional "apéritif" of fruit in between whiles, all of which is placed ready for him under the cover of a Canary's bath receptacle turned upside down as a protection from the weather, and fixed to the side of his former aviary.

He is by no means shy or difficult of approach himself, though should the hen happen to be feeding when anyone approaches, his warning "click," "click" rings out at once, and she instantly dives headlong into the surrounding bushes, and having apparently seen her to a safe distance, he returns once more. He is a very early riser, and is "afoot" before any, save perhaps the Swifts, and with the exception of these he is also the last to retire to roost. His favourite perch is, I think, a laburnum tree, to which he always resorts early in the morning and last thing at night, but he regales us all day from various parts of his domain, and seems just as much at home in tall Scotch firs, oaks, or thick laurel and other bushes. I have never seen him sing either from the top of a bush or tree, but always from about three parts up.

He is, to sum up, a model bird in every way, and my one haunting fear may be crystallised in the word "Owls"!

But I must not waste further valuable space on matter which has nothing whatever to do with the subject in hand, viz., the varieties of Virginian Cardinals; indeed, I must apologise to the Editor as it is for using up so much of his valuable space.

The Robin as a Pet Bird.

By FRED CAVES.

This little songster is so common in the country-side that every garden can boast its Robin, and every thicket, hedge, wood, or lane, maintains its dozens. It is a tame little bird at all times, but especially when hunger drives it from the rural districts to the town and suburban homesteads; this, of course, occuring in winter time.

Though very pugnacious where its own kind are concerned, the Robin is quite agreeable when kept in a large aviary with other birds about its own size. With small and delicate birds the Robin is rather a "bully," whilst with larger birds, its impertinence often earns it a blow from a beak stronger than its own.

I strongly recommend the Robin as a single cage bird, and a cock will sing practically all the year round. It is easily caught and will become tame in a very short time. I refer to the majority, there being a few, as with all other birds, which never will become steady. The Robin which I now possess has been caged since last autumn, and has been singing since his first week of captivity.

Many people who are bird lovers know little or nothing about the Robin. Some do not know it has a good song, whilst others aver that in captivity it will surely die. Many superstitious people tell some wonderfully imaginative stories of the Robin.

Certainly it has some strange characteristics. I noticed a large tabby cat, on one occasion, spring upon an unsuspecting Robin and the little bird was quickly slain. Although the cat was lean and obviously hungry it turned and walked away, licking its lips with apparent displeasure. At another time I witnessed a similar incident, and eventually found out the reason. The flesh of the Robin has a distinctly bitter flavour, hence the strange conduct of the cat.

The popular theory that young Robins, when able to take care of themselves, kill their parents, I have never been able to verify. Dead Robins found at this time of the year are probably the results of fights between adult males, or full grown youngsters, and not necessarily relations.

These traits are not disqualifications, and if they were, they are amply made up for by its bold and fearless demeanour when thoroughly tamed, its amusing little ways, and its fine quality song, as well as its beautiful plumage. Altogether this little bird makes one of the finest cage pets that can be named.

A good roomy cage, of the box pattern, a good insectile food, easily procurable at 1s. or 1s. 6d. per lb., a little live food occasionally, and a roomy bath are the essentials. Given these the Robin is ideal as a pet. If foolish prejudice against keeping a Robin were entirely dismissed the little songster would become a very popular cage bird, and would figure largely on our show benches in the British section. Give the Robin a fair trial and the lover of pet birds will never be without one.

The Greater Lemon-Crested Cockatoo.

How I Keep, Feed, and exhibit this beautiful species of the Parrot tribe.

By W. LIDGETT, Hon. Secretary, Norwich Cage Bird Society.

An entry in the Foreign Bird Section of our Competition announced last week.

ALTHOUGH for many years I have kept birds of all kinds, foreign birds have always had the premier position in my aviary, and the softest spot in my heart. Many and varied have been the foreign birds that have graced my place with their beauty, and some with their tiny songs, but up to the present none has stood so paramount in my estimation as this beautiful large species of the Parrot tribe the Greater Lemon-crested Cockatoo.

I first became the possessor of one of these birds in 1912, and when I first gazed on his pure white plumage, just tinged with yellow under the tail, and his beautiful yellow crest, his massive black beak, and keen eyes, I thought this is indeed one of the most beautiful of God's feathered creatures, although, perhaps, not one of the most gorgeous-coloured of the Parrot tribe.

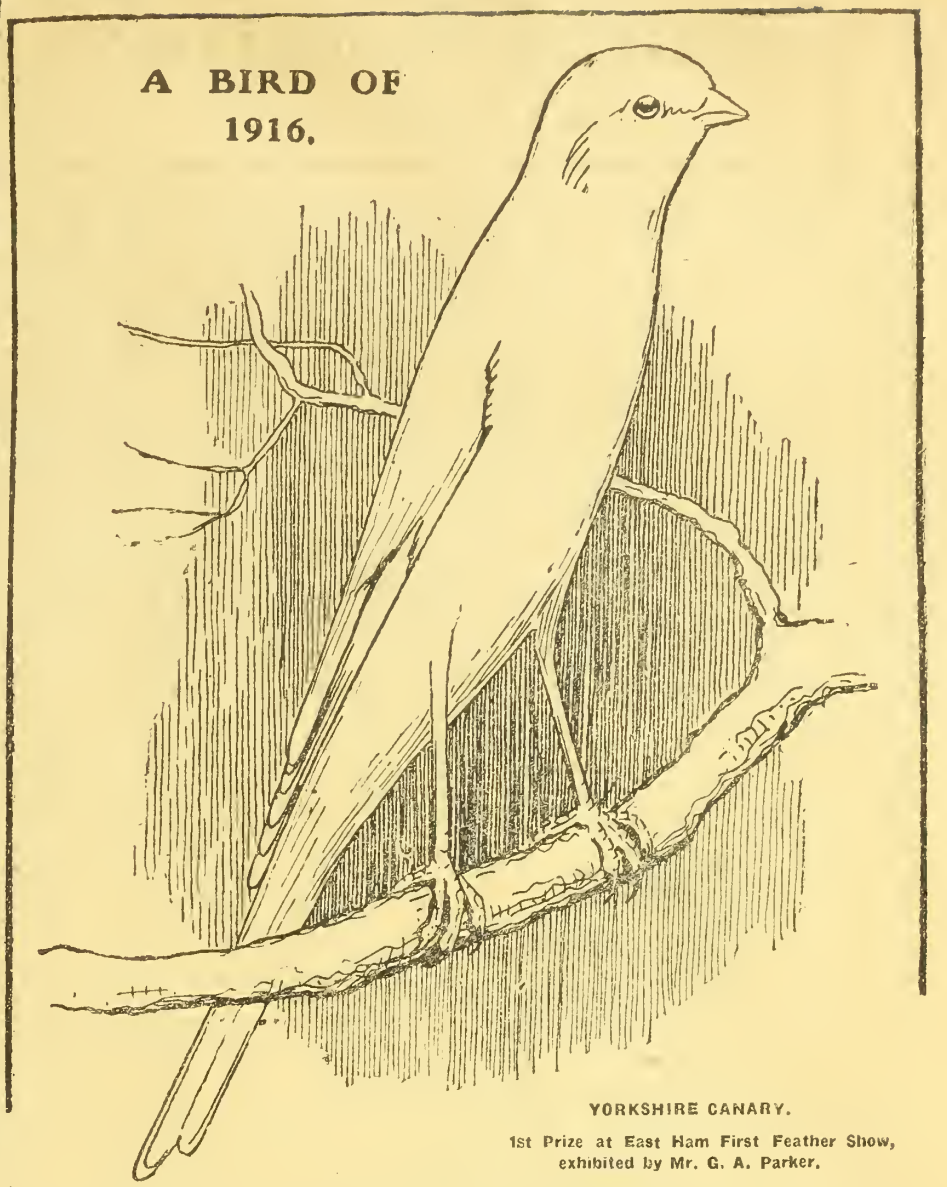
Of course, being a very large bird, this no doubt deters many aviculturists with limited space from keeping this, or any of the larger foreign birds, as many think they require a large amount of space. If one is blessed with large open-air aviaries to let them fly loose they no doubt do well, but if one procures the largest cage possible they do just as well, and, in fact, if properly kept, even better, as the plumage does not become so dirty; proper attention, of course, being absolutely essential. Mine is kept in a massive wire Parrot cage, the bottom thickly covered with white sawdust, and a tin full of grit always in the cage, and he is now in the best of condition.

How I Cured the Feather-plucking Habit.

After I had had this bird about two years and three months I was surprised to find, one day, it had started feather plucking very slightly. At first I thought perhaps, as it was summer time, it had got a little over-heated in its blood, and a dose or two of Dinneford's Magnesia would soon put things right. But, alas! I was soon to find I was mistaken. From a few stray feathers at first, very soon there was a large bare patch on its breast nearly as large as the palm of one's hand.

I tried rubbing with a mild solution of bitter aloes, but this had not the slightest effect, the bird simply eating it as if it were chocolate. Being a dog fancier as well as a bird fancier, I knew the value of sulphur as a cure for skin disease, and also as a medicine, so I decided to try what this would do. I also determined to try keeping it outdoors night and day, and, after nearly four months of outdoor treatment, and about a dozen rubbings down with the sulphur (I ought to mention that I mixed this with vaseline and made an ointment), I had completely cured it, and have not had a repetition of this most annoying habit again so far.

Perhaps one may say that it is all very well to talk of rubbing a bird with a beak such as possessed by a Lemon-crest, with vaseline and sulphur, but what about the hand that rubbed it? I might say that although tame, this bird gave me several "playful" nips during these operations, but I accomplished my object in curing it of feather plucking, and this has more than compensated me for those bites.



The food I supply is white oats three parts, sunflower two parts, hemp one-eighth. This comprises its stock mixture. In addition I give an occasional good meal of large plain canary seed, as I find this keeps the bird well occupied in cracking the seed, and although one would hardly think so great a beak could crack such a tiny seed, they do it with ease. Monkey nuts are also given three times a week, and a plain biscuit every day. Ripe fruit in season is also given, and green food, such as freshly-gathered chickweed or lettuces, is an eagerly looked-for dainty. It will be noticed that I give an apparently small amount of hemp seed. After having kept this bird nearly two years I found that hemp seed has two rather bad properties as food for this species. Although not wishing to pose as an authority, I always make it a point whenever making a fresh addition to my collection to study its habits, and I found that hemp seed not only darkened the white plumage, and seemed to take the beautiful gloss therefrom, but it also seemed to be even more heating to this bird than sunflower seed.

I have had my Cockatoo nearly four years, as it came into my possession in September, 1912, but I have as yet only exhibited it four times, and each time at the annual show of the Newark C.B.S. The war has somewhat upset all one's calculations and ambitions, otherwise this bird would have tried conclusions at some of the larger open shows, but his record is not bad, for in four attempts he has won three firsts, five specials, one silver cup best bird in show, and one second, then being beaten by another of my own Cockatoos, which also won for me the silver cup the second year in succession, and thus outright.

When I exhibit I always send in the same cage as he is kept in at home after well cleaning and polishing. Of course, when one sends these large foreign birds out of town they have to be securely covered up to avoid draughts, as although they can stand any amount of cold, draughts soon make them lumpy, and then their chance is spoilt.

A Delightful Pet.

Outside of the exhibition world these birds make delightful pets. They soon become exceedingly tame with those they know, and the beautiful whiteness of their plumage makes them an attraction both to their owner, and to the visitors. They are easily kept and catered for, and anyone wanting a delightful and beautiful foreign bird might do much worse than try keeping a Lemon-crested Cockatoo.

YORKSHIRE CANARY.

Learning From Enemy Methods.

A paper read before the members of the Leeds Roller C.C. by Mr. Montague, and being a translation from a high Hun authority on the methods of training the Roller Canary for contest singing, as practised by the leading German breeders.

THE development of the young Roller Canary's song is the most important and interesting part of the whole breeding season, a source of delight, but very often a good deal of annoyance too; the general rule is the better the Schoolmasters, and the more harmonious their song, the better is the prospect of excellent youngsters.

Schoolmasters whose songs do not harmonise with one another develop only in exceptional cases good singers, the faults of the old birds being taken by the youngsters. Again, one youngster with a single bad tour can spoil the whole lot in a few days. You will get such youngsters every year, no matter how careful you may be, and youngsters like these you must remove early. Dispose of them as soon as possible, or put them in a dark cage in a cold room, and the song may go back to a formal study; this is a remedy sometimes, but very, very seldom.

It is further advisable to put the Schoolmasters beside one another for mutual support. The better youngsters you put close to them, the inferior ones further away; birds which are staged immediately under one another have very often exactly the same song.

The tours of the young of the first round generally follow the tours of the parent birds they hear in the breeding cage, but as the breeding season wanes you will find that the youngsters are more attentive to their song study, and pay more attention to their tutor, though it is very seldom that a pupil surpasses his tutor.

Whoever disposes of his best youngsters first would be in danger that the rest get more and more reduced in song. The young cocks you have to bring to a Schoolmaster as soon as they start to warble. You may cage them off singly in small wire cages about 7in. wide, 8in. high, and 10in. long, each cage, with bird in it, being put into a song box.

Another way is to use a song cabinet, or song wardrobe, fitted up so as to consist of ten or fifteen compartments. Either each compartment in the cabinet is darkened with a green curtain, or you pull the blinds or close the shutters on the song boxes when you have them on the cabinet. The cheapest way is to fit up a case like a book rack in such a way you can put a good number of cages into same. Between each cage you put a piece of pasteboard or small boards, in order that the birds cannot see each other.

The Schoolmasters should be old cocks of prime quality, in full song, and of the same strain as the youngsters they are intended to teach; otherwise the youngsters would learn nothing, and sometimes would spoil the old birds too. For a big number of youngsters you have to use several Schoolmasters, the whole party perfecting between them a wonderful concerto.

Be careful not to get a poor singer with inferior notes for a Schoolmaster, for the young take far sooner to the poorer tours, because they are easier for them to learn. Every strain will have to be kept separate. Take urgent caution not to put a prime Schoolmaster to a common class of youngsters of poor quality strain, for such birds would not learn much, but spoil the expensive Schoolmaster's song.

In the second year, after the moult, you should not forget to bring each cock to a good Schoolmaster, if possible, but the Schoolmaster must be of his own strain; only in his third year is a Roller a consistent singer. You must not expect the young birds to make up a song between themselves without a teacher; they would never bring themselves to perfection, so you should try and get the best schoolmaster possible.

When you start their apprenticeship you gradually darken their surroundings, for by this method you induce the youngsters to study their song better. The first impression you will get is that it is cruelty to animals, but you will find, upon close inspection, that the youngsters feel quite happy, and are eager to perfect their song. In leaving them in open cages you will get nothing but disagreeable screechers.

Some youngsters will not sing for weeks, or even months, after they are caged off, but that sort generally remain dabblers in song, and are no good on the song bench. The only remedy for youngsters of this sort is to take them into a spare room and hang the cages on the wall a good distance from each other; by these means you can generally induce them to sing.

The best youngsters are those who are continuously at it with swelling throat, closed beak, and which sit quite still while singing. Such birds give promise of becoming good ones, because the deep knorre (bass), the sonorous bent hollow roll, as well as all the deep chest tours, are sung with the closed beak, often, too, with quick motion of same, but high and thin tours will be performed with open beak.

About the middle of November is the best time for the young birds to be expected to be in full song; birds that are not perfect by the end of December are generally not extra-good singers, that is unless they are very late youngsters. Whoever is careful with his birds, and not too sparing with Schoolmasters, should, with ordinary luck, have no cause to complain about his success.

In order to get a bird accustomed to sing at night by artificial light you keep him dark in the daytime, and bring him to full gaslight at night, and he will soon start to sing.

The attempt has been made to use a Nightingale as a Schoolmaster, but the result has not been very satisfactory; only from a good old cock of the same strain as the youngsters can you expect good results. The strophes of the Nightingale the young will heartily perform, but never to such a perfection as the Canary song, and they soon will become mere song dabblers. Therefore you should never give a bird a tutor other than one of his own strain, as to do otherwise is to court certain disaster.

Concerning bird organs for tutors, breeders are sometimes at a disadvantage, as the supposed Schoolmaster sometimes stops his song just at a time when the young are mostly in want of the same, as he may have started to come in the moult. In order to avoid this danger some breeders do not use the Schoolmaster for breeding purposes, or, if so, only for one round. By so doing you can reasonably expect that the bird will not moult as early as if he were in the breeding room all the season.

But even then you will sometimes have disappointments. In that case, but only in that, the bird organ is a remedy for a sudden stoppage in song study, and will save them from going backwards. As a substitute for a Schoolmaster the bird organ will not bear comparison; the best cock you can get is the only proper tutor for finishing the education of young birds which are intended for contest singers.

NOTES FROM AN OLD DIARY.

By T. H. KINCH.

FROM a child I have always had pets of some kind—either cats, rabbits, rats, mice or birds. I have kept rabbits by the hundred as a boy, and, had I known as much about them as I do now, should have established a new variety—one with black ears, nose and feet, with a fawn body.

But CAGE BIRDS is not a rabbit paper, so I must not trespass. I had a quite young Canary given me as a birthday present, which turned out to be a hen. I was at that time about seven years old. I was advised to get a mate for it, and as I could not get a Canary one given me. I borrowed a cock Goldfinch to put with it. I put them together, never thinking that I should have to put in building materials, so the eggs she laid were all broken at the cage bottom.

Spurred by Misfortune.

Then the Goldfinch died; and that was my first start in Mule breeding. This simple instance left such an impression on my mind that I then began to study birds, and to keep them. In those days there were plenty of people to give me advice, but I am afraid their advice was, like my knowledge, worthless.

I had, the next year, a nest of young Thrushes given me, which I hand reared. I saved three out of four. The food I gave them was milk sop and barley-meal made into a paste, with a few worms daily. Only one was I allowed to keep; the rest I gave away. This one, in spite of all the rough treatment it received, I kept for years; it was a good singer.

I might here state that my parents were very strict, which made me write in a large entry book all which took place respecting my birds, also the food, etc., I gave them. I did not like this task at all, but I had to do it or else give up my birds. Many a time since have I been thankful for this discipline, which I commend to young beginners. Many a good half-hour have I spent going through my old diary, and many a laugh have I had over my simplicity.

When I was first advised to put a large stone in my Thrushes' cage and give them snails to crack I was amazed, and could not credit a bird having that knowledge; but after watching it and seeing the results I found that my adviser's knowledge was superior to mine.

Primitive Bird Traps.

In the earlier seventies no bird papers reached the country, so I had to store up the knowledge gained and note it down for further guidance, which proved very useful as I grew up. The friend who advised me as to my Thrush was an under-gardener in a large establishment. He taught me how to catch birds; he used to set a hollow basket-lid with twigs twisted, and baited underneath. Before long I became quite expert in this mode of capture, but at the present time I cannot think how it was done.

As we had several of these traps about, it was very interesting to go the round of them. They were always placed on the outskirts of a wood, and many a good bird was taken. One morning we had a black and white Blackbird under one of the traps—a cock bird with white wings, which my friend said was worth £5. I doubted that a bird could be worth that amount, but he did sell it to a fancier in Norwich for that sum.

He also caught and sold several Goldcrest Wrens. These were then thought a lot of, but I doubt now if they were exhibited in those days. We soon began clap-net catching. We made a net from old fishing nets, and caught all kinds of birds. My friend, of course, had the pick, and sold them in Norwich; I had what he did not want, and put them in an old outhouse with several thicknesses of net over the doorway, the door being missing. I placed branches of trees for them to perch on.

THE STOCK BOOK

Simplifies the operations in the Bird room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

Price 6d., from your Newsagent, or 7d. (postal order) post free, from "CAGE BIRDS," 154, ... Street, London, E.C.

The varieties caught were Linnets, Chaffinches, and Greenfinches (in great numbers), Hedge Sparrows, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Redwings. After keeping them through the winter I generally gave them liberty in the spring, and used the outhouse for young Wood-pigeons, Jays, and Hawks, which I used to hand-rear and sell for pocket-money.

I was also a good hand at bird-nesting and collecting eggs. At one time I had a fine collection. At that time I was living with a relative on a large estate, so I had plenty of opportunities of collecting, but nearly always got into conflict with the keepers, as their preserves were my best hunting ground.

Tree'd!

On one occasion I was up a fir-tree, and the head keeper managed to get within a few yards of me. I slid down the branches when he raised his gun as if to shoot me. This did frighten me considerably, for I thought he was in earnest; but when I told my friend he laughed at me, and advised me not to take any notice of the gun, but to run at once if the gamekeeper cut a stick, as that was more like business.

On another occasion I was up a hollow tree, after an Owl's nest, when the gamekeeper again got close to me. In coming down I got my foot in an opening of the tree and fell, and on the arrival of the keeper I was hanging head downwards. He threatened to have his revenge, but the affair ended in a little lecture. I told him what eggs I was after, and he helped me to get them, as he was "death" on all Owls, ignorantly believing that they destroyed the Pheasants.

I have seen over twenty Owls on his "varmint" pole, besides Jays, Crows, and Hawks. This used to be a sight in the spring, and one which he was delighted to show anyone. The pole was also utilised for cats, dogs, polecats, stoats, and weasels, and my one-time enemy was always good enough to tell me the distinction between them, and thus I learned many a lesson in natural history. I believe this gamekeeper was paid so much a head for the "varmint."

I often went with him on his rounds, when I could collect eggs and birds and assist in feeding the young Pheasants. One job he gave me to do was to water the grass with a watering-can with a rose in. He would not explain to me why he did that, but I found out when I began to keep insectivorous birds.

Early Attempts at Hand-rearing.

When I was between twelve and thirteen years of age I used to hand-rear Thrushes, Blackbirds, Bullfinches, Goldfinches, and Linnets. This was always done in my spare time, and before I started to school. Many a morning have I been up at 4 a.m. attending to my pets.

My friend used to sell them to fanciers he knew in Norwich, but I am afraid I did not get my full share of the spoil, for I only received a few pence for each. I found that in one year I had made £1 from those I had hand-reared. I did not go in for raising any insectivorous birds until years after, but I have always found them to be just as easy to bring up as the others.

Soon after I was thirteen or so we left the estate, and went to Norwich, where I soon caught the Canary fever, as several of my schoolmates' parents were breeders. I used, as an excuse, to take them green food, and so got a look at the birds, and saw the way they were managed.

But I was not able to keep a Canary there. I had to be contented with two birds only—a Goldfinch and Bullfinch. My Goldfinch was taught by a fancier to draw up his seed and water. This bird I kept for over ten years—a good ripe age, although I have kept one even longer.

After two years' stay in Norwich we came to the Midlands, to another large estate, and, being older, and having now a considerable knowledge of birds, I was looked upon as an authority by my Grammar School mates, and led them on many an expedition, both for eggs and young.

Many a scrape did we get into over our raids, chiefly over catching with clap-nets, in gardens and grounds in the neighbourhood. Many a net was forfeited; but as we had an unlimited stock of fish netting, and poles could easily be cut, we did not greatly mind.

But these evening raids caused us to neglect night school, singing, and music lessons, and then we had to give an explanation, and were punished, all nets being destroyed which were not hidden. Then we had to sing small for a time.

The birds we caught were of all kinds, and were turned loose into a large stable, fish netting being placed across the door to give light. This stable was made quite artistic with old logs, branches of various trees, and shrubs. This place was never used for its legitimate purpose, and was out of the ken of the authorities. There were three of us in company, and we used to sell our birds to schoolmates and others, and our example caused many a boy to take up birds. We started with British birds, and from them got on to Canaries, and became in time genuine fanciers.

As a boy, nesting was my favourite pastime, and, as I had the run of a large park, I knew well where to find all the nests. A great many of the old trees had holes in them, which were the favourite places for Jackdaws, Owls, Hawks, and Pigeons. Some of the holes were down so deep I could not reach to the bottom of them; but, not to be done, I filled the holes up with stones, turf, etc., so as to get within arm's reach on the next occasion.

As the Jackdaws were so plentiful, I used to gather the eggs and sell them, or rather exchange them for sweets, to a confectioner, who said they made better cake than hens' eggs. Some we used to keep and beat up and fry in an old tin over a wood fire. With two companions as visitors, these teas, with fried eggs and new rolls, went down well; but one day we were caught nearly firing the outhouse where we did the cooking, and then there was trouble.

We soon got tired of this, and collected and hand-reared the young, principally Hawks, Owls, Jackdaws, and Jays. Many a mile we tramped to the woods for these. After getting them to feed and tame they readily sold, but only for a few pence.

A friend and myself were natural climbers. No tree would stop us. We invented a patent in those days, we thought, by using some old "spurs" as climbers. This device acted well, and many a branchless tree have we scaled by these simple means. One year we had sixteen Magpies, all hand-reared. This for a time was a serious drain on our limited finances, but we did manage to sell most of these for 1s. each, which we thought was a good price in those days.

We next collected Blue Rock Pigeons, and hand-reared about twenty. These were sold for shooting purposes. But we could only make 6d. each of them, and so left them for Hawks, several nests of which we reared.

My friend had a book on Hawking, so we tried to train them. We first started to blow a whistle when we fed them. This acted all right for a time, but when it was put into practice his theory was soon exploded, for the Hawks, having their freedom, refused to return. We tried for years to train them, but, as boys, I suppose we had not sufficient patience, although our knowledge was great, or we thought so.

After I left school I started upon Canaries and British birds in earnest, and tried my hand at muling, which knowledge I had to gain from experience, as I had no one to advise me nor any books or papers to run to.

THE ROLLER CANARY: ITS BREEDING AND REARING.

An instructive Paper given by Mr. H. G. Hill before the members of the Midland Roller Canary Club.

AND it is worse in the Canary's case, for this reason: A few weeks after he is nicely on "hard seed," the moult begins, and he has to grow a fresh crop of feathers. Examine these young feathers as they grow. You will find the "quills" full of rich, new blood. Where does it come from Why, from his food, of which blood is the extract, the very quintessence. And the only food he gets to make that constant supply of blood with is—"hard seed."

He soon gets fed up with the hard seed business—mark how reproachfully he looks at you in a morning, and from a slightly sunken eye. The very young novice might think how "fat" he was getting, but alas! it's all feathers and wind. And if you keep it up long enough you'll have to mind how you handle him, or you'll cut your fingers with his breast bone.

A Lesson from Nature.

It's all very simple when you think it out. To take young Canaries from their nourishing diet at from six to seven weeks old is to take away the biggest half of their daily rations just when they need them most—to meet the great demands on their blood supply for the making of new feathers, to say nothing of filling up and developing their frames and internal organs.

Nature is very wise. She knows that the young wild bird must grow his feathers, or perish in the chilly nights of early winter. Hence, she makes him grow feathers first, at whatever the cost to the rest of the bird. So the feathers grow, and your bird starves because he can't get enough out of "hard seed" to keep feathers growing and his body nourished too.

In my second year I gave my young birds egg-food every day right up to the moult, and then a little twice a day. Every day a little crushed hemp, too, and occasionally milk sop alternately to counteract the richness of the egg-food. That year I never lost a bird once out of the nest.

To put it in another way: My cocks have egg-food every day—or very nearly every day—until they go into the training cages, which is when they are moulted excepting around the head. Then, and not till then, do I begin to "wean" them off egg-food, and get them on "hard seed."

Then they get rape-seed only, with egg-food twice a week, and a little sweet apple twice. No hemp, no Canary, and no mixed seeds now. Of course, in these small dark cages they get no exercise, and so require the most moderate food supply. But whilst in the flights they are very active, and this in itself demands an equivalent in food, apart from growth of frame and feathers.

There is another little trouble apt to manifest itself as soon as your young are in the flights and doing for themselves. The birds go loose in their bowels, they go thick, and sometimes die. I believe that some breeders lose many birds in this way. I have had this trouble myself, but have never lost any through it. Hence, perhaps, my method of counteracting it may be useful to know.

It only requires a little thought. Remember that when the birds were mother-fed they were getting cuttle-fish bone mixed with the egg-food, as fed from the crop of the hen. In the flights they eat the egg-food, but at first don't take any cuttlefish. Probably their young beaks are too tender to eat it.

Now, this cuttlefish is rich in lime and other salts which counteract the richness of the egg-food, besides being a valuable bone-building food. Just scrape a little of it into your powdered biscuit before mixing with the egg, and keep it up till you see the chicks eating the cuttlefish themselves, which you will notice when they get from eight to ten weeks old. Crushed hemp is also useful here, I have found. But all hemp used must be sweet and sound.

Green Food, or No Green Food?

It will be observed that in the foregoing remarks I have made no reference to green food as a portion of the diet of my birds. I mate up my birds early, at a time when the use of green food is risky, owing to frost, or its being sodden with moisture, or to chilly and damp weather conditions.

Hence I never use it. I have reared brood after brood of healthy young that have never been sick nor sorry, the mothers of which have never seen green food, and this, to my mind, is a conclusive proof that it is not absolutely necessary, at any rate in the months of March and April.

Later, when the days get hot I give a small quantity of young lettuce, gathered fresh and dry from my own garden, but more as a refresher then because I think it necessary as a food. In the winter I use sweet apple once a week all round the bird room. That is all.

But I do not invite the novice to follow in my footsteps in this particular. Many experienced breeders, I believe, use this food fairly liberally in the breeding season and get good results. I have proved that it is not necessary, but that is not to say that, under proper conditions, and with care in its administration, it is not beneficial.

At the same time it seems to me that the risks in using it in the cold months of early spring are greater than any advantages which can reasonably be hoped for from its use. But in the hot days the risk decreases, and the need increases. So I would say to the novice, "Don't" in the early days, if the weather is frost-inclined, or even cold and damp; but "Do" later, bringing your birds very gradually on to the green food as the season advances so that the sudden change may not upset either the hens or the young.

I have not in this paper the time or space to deal adequately with my own personal experiences in training, and in the tours of our birds; but if my views on these subjects would be of interest to my fellow members, I shall be pleased to give a paper dealing with same later on. At this time I have chosen the above subjects as being of more immediate interest at this season of the year.

In conclusion, let me wish all prosperity to the Midland Roller C.C. and the British Roller fancy in general, and a successful season to novice and old hand alike.

HOW A CARDIFF COBBLER BRED SOME GOLDFINCH-LINNET HYBRIDS.

A Birdy Story Clothed with a few "Frills."

By E. W. ALLSOPP (Cardiff).

AMONGST a small circle of Cardiff enthusiasts excitement has run high lately in sympathy with the hopes of a fellow member that he would be successful in breeding a nest of Goldie-Linnet Hybrids. These youngsters, I am very pleased to report, have now come to town.

This is just a bare statement of facts, but I fear that in itself it would be about on a par with the week-old fledglings. To be properly appreciated it needs clothing attractively, and this I will make an effort to do.

Hybrid breeders to-day have a rare choice of authorities who have set out certain cardinal points to follow in order in the long run to ensure success, and these instructions are based upon their own long and patient observations and experience.

We know, however, that occasionally the novice steps in, and in sheer ignorance rudely brushes aside nearly everything excepting the pair of birds, scores heavily, and is the exception that proves the rule; it has been so in this instance.

The Beauties of Bute Street.

I will leave our "Town Clerk" to enlarge upon the beauties of Cardiff. And whilst I know that he, like all good town clerks, will extol the city and its environs to the skies, I am also sure he will not even hint at Bute Street as a beauty spot; of Bute Street and its neighbourhood he will maintain a profound and discreet silence. I have seen Mr. J. W. Ramsden strolling along Bute Street; Mr. E. Baker, of Cowes, has been up and down it; other celebrities of our bird world have done likewise, and one and all would expect it to be the very last street in which to locate birdy hybrids. Yet in this street is the home of our Goldie-Linnets.

From the G.W.R. station the approach to Bute Street leads through "Custom House Street"—really Cardiff's wholesale fish, fruit and vegetable market, and all day long from the cavernous depths of the warehouses emerge the porters. It is amusing to watch a nimble stranger successfully dodge the first of these laden with a box of lemons; with luck he just misses another with a stem of bananas; but eventually gets "one for his nob," as the cribbage players say, from the third, with a bag of potatoes. In the confusion the chances are he will get "two for his heels" from the porter with a crate of cabbages, who apparently has not noticed the stranger's difficulties.

However, beyond a few safety pins and bits of string, nothing more is usually needed unless it be ample apologies to the porter of porters for having inadvertently obstructed them in their work. Fortunately, though the risks are many, and the excitement great, the street is short, and soon we are in Bute Street.

Care is needed in taking the corner, for usually a shoe-black is either in the doorway of a restaurant, or upon the edge of the pavement (depends upon the weather), polishing the foot-wear of a nigger; and to upset the balance of this gent is to get either an expansive smile, due east by west, with a gold tooth or so displayed as effectively as the wedding ring upon the new brire's finger; or a reception which will necessitate a re-arrangement of the scheme of safety pins and strings. Much depends upon the size and weight of the nigger.

A Cosmopolitan Community.

A few paces from this corner of comedies and tragedies, and you are in the Greek quarter. As a lad I think I must have had a fertile imagination, for I used to conjure up fearful scenes based upon the saying of "when Greek meets Greek," but here I have seen hundreds of Greeks meet, and nothing untoward has happened. Away in the tobacconist's back parlour may be found about twenty Greeks card playing, smoking, and sipping coffee all day, and though a very frequent visitor myself after the choice cigarette tobacco smoked by the Greeks, I have yet to see the "tug of war" which should ensue according to the proverb. It seems to me Greeks are a self-contained people, even enjoying their own queerly constructed kirk and queerly got-up Priest.

This reverend gentleman is one of the sights of the district. Of portly form, and imposing carriage, he appears yet more portly by reason of a flowing black robe reaching to his feet. Some say nothing beyond an odd petticoat or so is needed to keep his nether limbs warm, but whilst tacking behind him one very windy day I saw displayed about half a yard of an ordinary man's black trousers, which effectively settled speculation.

However, it is the hat that takes the eye. A black affair, just a tall, straight cylinder, no brim, but surmounted by a flat flanged top. Just how he manages to wear it safely causes heavy gambling, and a settlement is, I fear, afar off, for even a very violent wind or a very blind Custom House Street porter won't oblige in solving the mystery.

A Priest, and a Parasol.

Then there is his hair, and what hair, too, a proper crowning glory; no lady possesses a head of hair so dense or of a more lovely tone of brown. The ends are tucked below the collar of his robe. Some say it extends to his waist, others say only to his shoulders. All I know is that it goes beyond his neck; and it is the envy of every lass that sees it. In hot weather all these wondrous things are protected by a lavender-coloured parasol which he carries. "The giddy young thing," I heard a faded lady say. If nothing else, it assures him an attraction and exclusiveness that is the despair, I am sure, of my friend, the Rev. C. B. Joliffe, a Baptist minister to wit, and withal a good man, though be it remembered he has not said so.

From the Greek quarter we now gradually merge into the Arab colony. "Abdul Satar" tells you on his little sign that he has a good and cheap "lodging house," at least it says so on one side of the sign. On the other side the writer left out the "g" thus making is read "loding" house. "Mahomed Ali" says he also has good cheap beds. Like the Greeks, our colony of Arabs have their own kirk, a dark old shop, with the windows boarded half-way up.

To see a party of Arab firemen land from their first steamer is a sight never to be forgotten. On a bitterly cold wintry day I have seen them wending their weary way to the lodging houses clad only in the rig-out of the stoke-hole, just a pair of trousers as thin as muslin, with naked feet thrust into a pair of slippers, a tiny much-braided skull-cap, and a dirty shirt, worn outside of the trousers, the tail of which flaps in the wind in rythm with the owner's shivers, or sad cough.

If these poor devils survive a few trips they learn better than to land again like this; they then arrive in the very latest fashion of tailoring, displaying wondrous schemes of blue, yellow, red and other fragments from the rainbow. To see an Arab so attired and posed upon his cane, one leg, and a toe of the other foot, cleaning his teeth that are never dirty, with a piece of dried liquorice root, is to see a sight not easily forgotten.

To hear them is to hear pandemonium, and after the burial of a compatriot you can hear them at their best or worst. Dressed immaculately in black and with a red and tasseled fez, they tumble out of the mourning coaches in sixes, sevens and eights, and then each group harangues with its particular driver as to payment, or maybe non-payment.

I feel sure my curiosity will get me a thick ear some day, and if the risk of rummaging around the Arab quarter were not more than this I think I would venture into their "mosque," especially when I hear from the outside the queer incantations around the corpse; but I fear any intrusion into their religious affairs on the part of an unbeliever would involve more risk than mentioned.

"Chinks" behind Chinks.

Anyhow, seeing that our Hybrids are the best part of a mile from the shoe-black and the nigger at the corner, we had better step out a bit, for we still have to pass through the quarter favoured by the "Chinks," as the seamen call them, really Chinese. Here we find Wings and Tings, Wees and Woes, even Tom Lee. Lodging houses and laundries are everywhere, also the smell of soap-suds, and of queer mixtures in the process of cooking, for all Chinamen are either ships' cooks or laundry men.

If you can read the soulless visages, empty as the cupboard of old Mother Hubbard, of the inhabitants of this quarter, then you beat me hollow. In seven years daily passing amongst them I have seen nothing more redeeming than a little spontaneous parental kindness to their hybrid youngsters. Inveterate gamblers, the playing of Fan-tan absorbs their interest when they are not engaged with worse things. Between chinks and from behind curtains and other things at nearly all hours of the day or night one or two beady bleared eyes may be seen, all looking for the police who may at any time raid their dens.

After passing lodging houses of Scandinavian, Norwegian and other nationalities, at last we enter the shop of Mr. Hurd, a son of St. Crispin, of portly dimensions, a bird fancier, a member of our Society, a good man withal, and, alas, a bad cripple. We who have our freedom of life and the full use of our limbs can hardly realise what it means to hobble to a stool in the early morn and remain on that stool till late at eve, engaged upon all manners of repairs to boots and shoes of all manner of sorts and sizes.

The Cripple's Solace.

That my old friend's misfortune is soothed by keeping a few birds is a fact, and his life is brightened by strokes of good luck with his birds, which no one will begrudge him. Here, hung up high all round the shop, tended by his wife or son, and maintained in capital condition of health and cleanliness, are a few Norwich Plainheads, and an odd British bird or two.

Amongst other birds bred last season was a really smart dark buff Linnet-Canary Mule. The local Mule men soon spotted it, and headed by a well-known erstwhile Mule king, the bidding early soared to fifteen shillings. To-day the bidding stands at two pounds, but my friend tells me his wife has become attached to the bird, and as it is a case of a good wife attached to a good bird, and a good husband attached to both the good wife and the good bird, there is going to be "nothing doing." Anyone after this who bids still more and tries thereby to tempt further this good trinity, is deserving of being pushed into the Arab kirk, or worse.

This season, of course, the Hybrids are quite pushing aside the few good Plainheads he has bred. During the winter he accidentally procured a hen Linnet, really sold him for a cock, but philosophically, after more than 40 years' experience of Bute Street, he cut his loss and kept the hen, for, said he, "she might come in yet." In this shop, patronised mostly by seafaring men of nearly all nationalities, colour and sizes, every bird he introduces has either got to go real mad, and so get a short cut to liberty, or just settle down decent and quiet like. This latter the hen Linnet elected to do.

In fact, a month ago, when pacing the perches of a three-feet flight, she distinctly ignored a shop full of mixture and asked for a mate, and soon she had him in the person of a nice large Welsh Goldfinch. Then, in an ordinary nest-pan, she laid five eggs, and no more matronly Canary ever existed than this matronly Linnet.

After about eight days of exemplary conduct my friend decided to take no risk and transferred the eggs to a splendid feeding pair of Plainheads, and now, just as easy as shelling peas, four young have been hatched and are doing well.

No solitude, no careful winter preparation, no secret or fanciful methods or prescriptions, even no setting out for the goal in the first instance; just a chain of fortunate circumstances. We congratulate our friend. May the shadows of his treasures never grow less. Goldfinch-Linnet Hybrids have been bred before, but please remember, never in Bute Street, Cardiff.

Finally, like the village blacksmith, both my old friend and I have "something attempted, something done," and I trust have each "earned a night's repose." If the youngsters are successfully reared I shall be further pleased to advise all readers, but as the birds will by then have become naturally clothed, they will need no more of my clothing.

Birds and "Summer" Time.

WHETHER domesticated birds and other animals would be in any way thrown out of gear by shifting their living day an hour forward has been a much debated question, and we know at least one lady who has refused to alter the clocks and the routine of her household solely in consideration of the feelings of her poultry. According to the report made to the French Biological Society by Madame Nagcotte, the Sparrows and Pigeons of Paris at least have lined up with mankind in general in cheerfully accepting the altered conditions. It appears that this lady has for long been in the habit of repairing at a certain hour of the morning to the Luxemburg gardens in Paris with a bag of bread crumbs to feed Sparrows and Pigeons. The birds all knew her and were punctual to the moment to receive their accustomed meal. If she was before her time they were not there and she had to call them; if she was late she always found them waiting impatiently for her. Then came the new "summer time" and Mme. Nageotte fully expected that this would upset arrangements. But it did not. She went to the Luxembourg by the clock—that is an hour earlier—but the birds were all in attendance just as if no change had been made. The inference drawn is that these town birds did not take their times by the sun or the temperature, but by observation of the stir of life around them. Everybody was about an hour earlier, and so were the birds.

It is the same with the pigeons around St. Paul's Cathedral, at least so far as the luncheon hour is concerned; we cannot speak with authority about an early morning meal. These pigeons knew as well as possible that between one and two (old time) people would be about with bags of crumbs and other provender, and they could be seen gathering about the forecourt in expectation. The same happens now, but at a time which, from the birds' point of view, is an hour earlier. At one o'clock "summer time" the pigeons know quite well that their luncheon is due, and they are there waiting for it.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

K.M.B.—Answered by post.

NO RESULT (A.L.)—You say nothing at all about the condition of the Yorkshire cock, or whether he is, or was, in song or not when mated. It is quite possible that the Yorkshire was the faulty element in the union, but this cannot be proved without some knowledge of his condition, or, if he appears to be in good condition, it would even be necessary to mate the hen with another cock whose virility was sufficiently proved by his filling the eggs of other hens well this season before one could say with certainty that the hen was at fault. I rather incline to the belief that the cock was the one in fault, and although the hen has already done enough for this season, as she still continues laying you can do no harm by giving her a test mating with a lusty, vigorous cock, in stout song, which is known to be filling eggs well, letting him send her to nest and then removing him, leaving her to hatch out and rear the young by herself. You will then see if any of the eggs by him are fertile; even if they do not hatch there may be sufficient evidence of fertility to warrant keeping her for next season, whereas if there is no such evidence, and the hen is past her second year, you would do well to discard her altogether as a stock bird in future. Before mating her again you may give a mild aperient in the water, such as a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea and ten drops of lemon-juice for three days, and add to the dietary a liberal supply of dandelion seed heads, and a third of a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts maw, sesame and gold of pleasure-seed every second day.

GROWTH INSIDE BILL (H.A.H.).—It is impossible to say definitely what is the nature of the fleshy growth inside the bird's beak without seeing it. In all probability it is either a tumorous growth or a deposit of nodular matter, either of which might be removed by a small operation by a veterinary, or possibly your medical man might do it for you, but I do not advise you to attempt to do it yourself. It seems to be a question whether the bird is of sufficient value to warrant you placing it in the hands of a properly skilled person for advice, and operation if necessary. As regards the elongation at the tip, if this is of a hard and horny texture like the tip of a normal beak, with no pink streak showing in it beyond the point where the beak should naturally end, it would be quite safe to nip off this excess growth with a pair of sharp nail or embroidery scissors, so as to bring it to practically the same length as the upper mandible, and thus make it quite easy for the bird to feed properly. Medicinal treatment would be useless in this case.

BEGINNING TO SING (A.L.).—Some cocks will make efforts at warbling before they even leave the nest permanently. When getting nicely fledged they will often sit round the side of the nest, and after being fed will give vent to a tiny little warbling song of content, and if watched closely the throat will be seen to throb gently in unison. This habit may also be noticed when they leave the nest, and in some cases, but not all, will gradually develop into a little song by the time the birds are two months old or thereabouts. As a rule, however, they will make their first real attempts at singing, especially if caged alone, as soon as they are over their first moult. In some cases, chiefly among varieties that are not trained for singing and if allowed to fly together in groups in large flights or aviaries, they may not come into song to any extent before the January following the season when they were hatched. The song is the only reliable method for the novice to tell the sex of young birds by, but a practiced breeder would be able to pick out the sexes in nearly all cases by the bolder and more pushful appearance and character of the birds.

CAUSE OF SOFT EGGS (J. McV.).—The cause of the second clutch of eggs being without shells after the first clutch had been normal, assuming that the conditions and supply of shell-making material was the same in both cases, would be the exhaustion of the lower part of the oviduct where the shell is deposited. An overfed, or fat condition, would also predispose to the trouble. Had you suspected the trouble the best thing you could have done would have been to have given a dose of 20 drops of chemical food for a few days before laying commenced. In any case it would also have assisted in warding off the trouble to have kept a regular supply of cuttlefish available, and supplemented this by mixing with the sand on the cage floor a little old mortar smashed to a coarse powder and added a small teaspoonful of lime-water to the drinking water every second day whilst the hen was nesting.

COLOUR AND CLASSIFICATION (Scotland Gate).—(1) The interpretation of the reading of the class descriptions in the schedules naturally rests very largely with the Committee of the particular show, but in such a case as you give I should say it depended upon whether there was a class set apart for Cinnamons or A.O.V., whether cinnamon ticked or variegated Norwich were eligible to compete in a class for "Norwich, clear, ticked, or variegated." If either of the classes named were provided I should say cinnamon-marked Norwich would be more properly placed in one of them, as cinnamon-marking has not reached the status of a distinct variety in the Norwich in the same sense as it has in the Yorkshire and Border Fancy. If neither of the classes named were provided then I see no reason why cinnamon-marked Norwich should not compete with green-marked. (2) I do not recollect at the moment any particular show or district where cinnamon-ticked Norwich are totally barred from competition when the schedule reads as above, though I imagine all large shows which provide the classes named would adopt the view expressed in No. 1. (3) I do not quite see the point of this query as to whether there is any recognised distinction between cinnamon variegation and green variegation. There is the very obvious distinction of colour—cinnamon is a kind of light chestnut-brown, dun, or "khaki," as it was recently termed; whereas green is a dark olive green, often bordering on black, i.e., the ordinary blackish markings seen on Canaries.

SAMPLES OF RAPE (Roller).—(1) Is a sample of English rape of very fair quality, but is apt to prove too relaxing for regular use as a portion of staple diet. (2) The large black seed is usually sold as Colc. The same remark applies as to No. 1. (3) Is the real summer rape, rather small in size, but mild, and of very fair quality. As a material portion of the dietary of high-class Rollers I should select this sample.

SUITABLE BIRD-HOUSE (G. Wood).—As you say the coal-house is well lit and ventilated, dry and warm, and it is certainly of a sufficient size, I do not see why it should not be convertible into a quite successful bird-house, either for Canaries or Mules. But simply using shelves and wire fronts to confine the birds, leaving the back and end walls of the house to form the other portions of the cages is by no means a good method. For instance, if you should find one of your cages infested with mites, or it should become necessary to overhaul and disinfect it during the nesting season, you are prevented doing it except by disturbing all your stock. It would be far better to go a step further and make cages to stand on the shelves, then, with one spare cage of similar pattern and size, you are able to cope with anything in the way of pest or disease immediately it crops up without upsetting all your stock. Of course, it is quite possible to succeed on the plan you have in view, but there must be a larger element of luck in it than when you have perfect control of all the separate cages. I should rather prefer the colony system than this kind of cage, by covering the doors and window with wire on frames, fixing up a dozen or so nesting sites, perches and small branches of Scotch fir, either with or without a couple of narrow shelves, and turn in one cock and four hens to fly loose. Of course, you would not turn in the cock before the spring.

LATE NESTING (Blackie).—It is quite true that young are hatched and successfully reared much later than this, but I am afraid that does not remove the fact that the moult will soon be starting with many birds, and when this happens it is a rather forlorn hope for any eggs or young that may be in the charge of those birds. The present season has been very unpropitious in many ways, so far, and there are many in the same case as yourself, finding the birds in better condition than hitherto and with very meagre results in hand. Whether you should endeavour to compensate for the earlier losses by allowing the birds to have another round is a question for yourself to decide. If you choose to take the risk, knowing the idiosyncrasies of your birds, I see no reason why you should not do so. In some cases, where the parents had not reared many young or perhaps none, I should certainly take the risk if I knew the hens were a good reliable sort.

VARIETY OF ROLLER (Taffie).—It is not really a case of variety or breed in either case you name. The best singing Roller is a question of thorough training as much as anything, and the best feeding parents may be a question of strain, but is certainly not one of any particular variety. All you really need look for is a cock that is thoroughly trained and sings a fair average number of good tours with the fewest possible faulty notes, and bred from a strain trained on similar lines, and hens that come of a similar well-trained stud as the cocks, and that have as few as possible bad feeding parents in their pedigree. On the latter point you may have to rely upon the breeder's information.

HEN NEAR LAYING (A. E. J.).—I am inclined to think there is really nothing wrong with the bird beyond perhaps a little constipation, which may be partly due to mechanical causes arising from the distension of the ovary, assuming that she was really getting near laying. In the latter event she will probably be relieved by this time. In any case add to the dietary for a time a fairly liberal supply of watercress, crisp young lettuce, or chickweed and add to the drinking water ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day until there is no signs of trouble in parting with the evacuations. There was no necessity to separate her.

DAMAGED BEAKS (B. G. R.).—It is not infrequent for the beaks of young Canaries to be more or less damaged, and sometimes it is certainly due to vice on the part of one or both parents, but at others, and probably in most cases, it is more in the nature of an accident, and may arise from a hen's too vigorous persuasions of the young to rise for food. Your observation of the hen is interesting, and suggests another possible cause but whether it could be done by the hen thrusting her beak too far in the beak of the young is a question that needs more close observation. As regards the future of the birds affected, if the damage is not too extensive, going too near the base of beak, it is quite possible they will be able to feed themselves, and that the beak will in course of a few months recover its full normal length. If they have any difficulty in feeding give them a daily supply of egg or biscuit food in a rather deep egg-drawer.

INFERTILITY (Scot).—I am afraid the troubles with an undue proportion of infertility which you have experienced this season can only be attributed to the climatic conditions, which, so far, have this year been of a very unusual nature, and these extraordinary conditions seem to be reflected in an abnormal condition of the birds in many cases. I have experienced something of it myself, and have come across quite a large number of similar cases where the condition of the birds is apparently faultless. With an improvement in the climatic conditions the latter end of the season bids fair to be the most successful part, if not the only chance of making good the meagre results of the earlier part, and with this object in view, where a hen has done very little or perhaps nothing in the rearing of young so far, and is now ready to start nesting at once, I should certainly give her a chance of trying a third time, and take all the risk of the moult coming on and finally cutting adrift one's hopes for this season. Should you decide on this course, give the birds a mild aperient in the water for one week, and in the next a tonic, such as six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel in the water for a few days, and treat them rather liberally with seedy chickweed and dandelion seed heads.

SQUATS ON PERCH (A. E. W.).—Am glad to hear the bird's toe is already better. You may go on with the treatment previously advised until it seems quite strong again. As regards the squatting and difficulty in breathing, I am inclined to think he may have "done himself" a little too well whilst breeding, when an abundance of rich food would be available, and is in consequence in an overfed and plethoric condition. But you might first of all catch him and closely examine the eyes to see if the sight is affected. If there are milky-white discs in the centres of the pupils the bird is undoubtedly blind from cataract, and this would account for its behaviour and, unfortunately, nothing you can do will be of any avail. If the eyes are normal then treat for a few weeks as follows:—Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part of the small reddish-brown summer rape. Once a week give separately a third of a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame seed, and on one other day half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle and linseed. In the drinking water add ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence two days in every three for a week, and in the next week give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and dilute sulphuric acid every second day. In the third and fourth weeks repeat the dosage of the two first weeks in the same order.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

SEXING JACKDAWS (R. W. Dennis).—I presume you are hand-rearing a nest of young Jackdaws, and I am afraid I cannot assist you much in the selection of sexes. Your best plan is to keep the largest and healthiest, giving the others their liberty as soon as they are able to find food for themselves. The sexes, even in old birds, are practically alike, although in the spring the cock bird is a little more glossy in plumage, and the grey patch on the neck a little more distinct. Both sexes are very amusing as pets. These birds are not difficult to feed, as they will eat almost anything, but it is as well to keep a stock food always before them, such as soaked Melox or a good brand of chicken meal; scraps from the table can be offered daily, and occasionally a small bird or mouse, and beetles, large caterpillars, and other insects will be appreciated. A rather large bone with a little meat left on it will amuse a Jackdaw for hours. The Softbill vol. of "The British Bird Manual" has a chapter on the Jackdaw, and deals with similar birds, giving the various food mixtures for them. Post free 1s. 2d. from this office.

SEXING YOUNG THRUSHES (A.B.).—The only reliable way to sex young Thrushes is by the song. Watch them closely, and as soon as you detect one warbling, cage him off separately. The song of the cock birds daily becomes louder and fuller, with more variety. If you are interested in showing, do not discard all the others. Keep the largest, as many of these big hens make the finest exhibition specimens. You can give them water now, both for drinking and bathing. Let them have the bath early in the morning on fine days, so that the cage has time to get thoroughly dry before night. When giving drinking water to young birds for the first time let it be just tepid, and as soon as they have had a good drink remove it, offering it again in an hour or so; do this until you feel it is safe to leave it with them without their drinking to excess.

YOUNG BIRDS WITH FITS (T. H. S.).—A good many young birds are lost in the manner you describe, and this arises mostly from injudicious feeding, although hanging them too long in the hot sunshine on a wall, or on the side of a house, will sometimes cause a fit. In your case I fear the giving of your young ones raw meat was the cause of the diarrhœa. This food should be given with great caution; it should be perfectly fresh and then scraped, not chopped up, and only a very little given at a time. Some successful bird keepers never use it. If you rear any more (and there is still time to secure a brood); withhold meat until they are fully grown; give green fly or very small insects, you will find they will do much better on them.

MOULTING A CHAFFINCH (Novice).—Although a Chaffinch is not a difficult bird to moult in the ordinary way, it is quite a different matter to moult one out fit for exhibition. In the first place, if the bird is steady, give him a good-sized cage, say 2ft. to 2ft. 6in. long, and occasionally run him into his show cage. In addition to his usual stock mixture he should have a little soft food if he will eat it, and a liberal supply of insects. If you have the time you should not miss any opportunity of collecting them for him. Green fly can be gathered anywhere; then there are house flies, spiders, small caterpillars, ants, and many others that your bird will appreciate. Keep him well supplied with these, and let him bathe frequently.

NO LUCK WITH MULES (Ubique).—I am sorry to hear of your bad luck, but I fear you do not stand alone, many breeders have done indifferently this season. If you can do so without inconvenience, allow the birds to fly together during the winter months. As regards hand-reared or Canary-reared Finches, some people are particularly partial to them, but I must confess that I have done equally as well with freshly-caught birds. Just occasionally one will have a Finch that will not mate, but as a rule, when these field-moulted birds do so they get fertile eggs. I have had these even from Finches that have been so wild that one could scarcely go near the cage, and I have also found that when these birds have paired with a Canary they frequently settle down and become quite tractable cage birds.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

COCKATIEL AS A TAME PET (Esperance).—Unless you can purchase one already tame, I consider 1½ years would be too old for the purpose you require. You should arrange with some breeder to let you have one as soon as it is able to fend for itself, or if you could get one even younger and hand feed it, there would then be more probability of its meeting your requirements. Your book will tell you how to treat it. I must, however, warn you that even with careful training and getting quite a young one, it is not everyone that talks, though they should make interesting and tame pets. Your query re paper must be addressed to the Editor.

WHAT BIRD? (A Lover of Cage Birds).—Your bird is either a Green Singing Finch or a St. Helena Seed-eater—almost impossible to say which without seeing it, as the two species seem so similar in a written description, though they are easy to distinguish when seen, as the last-named is a little larger and more brightly coloured than the first. The first-named is about the size of a Lesser Redpoll, and the other about the size of a Brown Linnet. I incline to the opinion that your bird is a St. Helena Seed-eater.

WHAT PARROT? (H.S.).—I am of the opinion that your bird is a Double-fronted or Levaillant's Amazon. The beak of an old bird is usually very rough, also its legs, the scales appearing quite horny. All the Amazons talk to a greater or lesser degree; but, as a rule, one cannot hope for much from a wild-caught adult. Keep your bird, as soon as it has steadied down a little, where it will see and hear what is going on around it. Do not keep it in a room which is only occupied occasionally; talk to it soothingly and pet it when attending to its wants, and you will thus fetch out its full talking capacity. While hearing and seeing the life of the house will be part of its education, it should not be kept where rushing movements will keep it in a continual state of scare. Chemical food is a good tonic, but it is equally important not to allow any constipation, and to give a gentle laxative at the first appearance of such. The bowels should move quite freely without any appearance of abnormal looseness.

"Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Avadavats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

YOUNG COCKATIELS BADLY FEATHERED (D. I. P.).—I think you would do well to send to our manager for "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d., post free). You would get ample details therein, such as space does not permit of in this column. Is the nestbox a flat-bottomed one? If so, this would account for so few hatching out. They use no nesting material, and on a flat surface the eggs roll about and get addled. The bottoms of nestboxes for Parrakeets should be concave. Ill-fledged youngsters often appear, but if there is no inherited weakness this soon disappears. I think it will be better for you to leave things to take their course. The old birds will turn them out of the nest if they get in the way. As well as canary and millet seed, supply oats, a saucer of dry broken biscuit, and plenty of green food. Perhaps I could better suggest cause and remedy if you told me how and where they are kept (i.e., how fed and treated generally). Your cock losing its flights is evidently merely the result of the annual moult.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

E. O. Ashmore. Ptomaine poisoning is the cause of your losses. To the eye the various samples you sent appear all right, nothing could determine the cause without an analysis.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2. — By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1½.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly Instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardhills," and Part 2. "Softhills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

BOOKS THAT HELP

Both the Novice and the Expert are the

"CAGE-BIRDS" BOOKS

They comprise expert advice on everything appertaining to the keeping, feeding, breeding and general management of Canaries, Mules and Hybrids, British and Foreign Birds. Send along at once for those most suited to your requirements.

On all matters relating to the fitting up of the accommodation for your birds you had better consult their construction and furnishing, by H. Norman, and note the best way to house your birds.

Money spent on suitable cages is well spent.

Make them yourself? Certainly, the book shows you how.

Many Photographs and Art Plates as well as Articles.

Cloth Gilt, 2/3 post free.
Stiff Paper Cover, 1/8 post free.
Profusely Illustrated.

Wisely fed birds are healthy birds, and healthy birds do you service. Avoid all errors of diet in feeding them, therefore will help you to feed them properly. It is especially valuable at the season when wild foods are to be had in such abundance, merely for the gathering.

There are many sketches and illustrations of all the best known wild plants.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES J OULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules is gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

Real practical information on every variety of Canary; illustrated with an art plate of a standard bird, is contained in

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL.

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVIARIES and CAGES, BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DISEASES & THEIR CURE SEEDS, Etc., and devotes a separate chapter to each individual variety.

Get a copy now, it will help you during the breeding season.

A WINTER VISITOR.

The Fieldfare is one of the most beautiful of our winter visitors, coming to us in September and remaining until April or May. Fieldfares are eminently gregarious birds; they arrive in bands, feed together throughout their winter with us, and nest in communities on their return to their summer quarters in the far north. The fine specimen here illustrated is the property of Mr. Edward Stephens, of Palmer's Green. It has only twice been exhibited, and has won 1st prize and silver medal at the Holborn Hall Show, and 1st and special prize for the best British bird at the show of the Hornsey and Wood Green C.B.S.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and are charged at two words a penny up to 48 words; after that 1d. per word. No single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 9d. 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, 2/6, according to size.

The rate for displayed advertisements is 7/6 per inch. Rates for a series on application.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona-fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

The Ideal Yorkshire Green Canary.

How to Produce It.

A Lecture delivered to the members of the Halifax O.S. by Mr. R. E. Helliwell, Halifax.

NOW pair the Belgian cross-bred to big birds which have plenty of frame and are well filled in; let them be two years old if possible. I do not care to use young birds if it can be avoided, for immature birds are not quite sufficiently developed for crossing purposes. From old hen birds you get far stronger young than from younger hens.

If a young Fancier will adopt the method suggested in his endeavour to produce the "working man's bird" the Yorkshire Green, and has only an ordinary share of luck, he is pretty certain to breed something good. If he has the making of a true fancier in him he will, of course, be possessed of plenty of patience and perseverance, and will not be discouraged if he does not succeed at the first attempt.

Upon these methods I have always proceeded, and I have produced birds which have gained high honours at all the leading shows, including the Crystal Palace. I am proud to be able to say that I was the breeder and exhibitor of the two champion Yellows in 1906-1907; they were bred from a variegated Yellow cock, bred in the way I have stated, paired to a self buff hen one-eighth bred, Green and Green and Double Buffs. I am giving this as an instance of what can be done by experimenting.

With regard to the show points of the ideal Yorkshire Green; the first quality is colour, for this quality alone 35 points out of the 100 are given, although in general colour is not given so much consideration at present as in former days. There is no standard of length in the Green Yorks as in the Clear Yorkshire, the standard of which is, of course, 6¾in.

The bird must be of a good bright, rich level colour without bronziness or a smoky appearance of feather, there should be no light under flue, and the colour of the plumage should be a good dark green, such as is seen in the grass in spring time, or in the leaves of evergreens just commencing to grow.

It should have a short beak, a good round head, well filled neck, and round shoulders, a very narrow well-filled round chest, and a good long body with wings well fitted right down to the root of the tail: the bird should be well drawn from the throat to the vent, with no chest bone showing.

The legs should be clean cut, but not stilty, and should not be set too high up the body; the tail should be like a pipe stem, the beak and legs dark in colour; the pencilling on back and thighs must be distinct, position must be an upstanding one, and the appearance sturdy.

In the keeping of any kind of Canary the most important time of all is the moulting time—I moult my birds two or three together in ordinary cages, that is providing they agree with each other.

Should I find any of my birds, whether young ones or old show birds, nicely started in the moult, I single them off and hang a fine curtain along the front of their cages at about six inches distance, so as to allow plenty of air; this prevents draughts at night, and I remove it every morning, keeping it off until about 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

—As soon as the birds have got well moulted up to the shoulders I believe in letting them have the bath freely, this hardens the birds and tightens their feather. I find if you give the birds the bath all the way through the moult they do not take to it so freely; the bird may be moulting well, but when it is only half clad with feathers, especially at a time when days are getting very short, it has not time to dry itself, then it gets cold, with the result that the feathers come square and patchy in colour—many a good bird has been spoilt in this way.

All through the moult I give them a liberal supply of summer rape and linseed along with their canary seed and they have also a little egg food twice a week. I give sprays of fresh mint and plaintain, or "rats tails," as we call them; these have a tendency to bring forth the bloom and at the same time act as a tonic.

The Yorkshire Green Canary is at its very best for colour at the age of three years, and will continue at its best to the last, if successful moulting is carried on each subsequent year.

I hope that those who have not tried my methods of breeding Green Canaries will give them a chance, and if the knowledge conveyed results in their success, I shall be well repaid for such trouble as I have taken in writing this paper. If any points have been omitted I shall be pleased to answer any question which may suggest itself to enquirers.

Meeting, July 2, R. Peart chair, and a good turnup of members to elect judge for annual show, Nov. 18-19. Mr. A. Holden (Gateshead) was elected. Will members please turn up and give their vote to Mr. Robert Mitchell, who is running for the committee?—R. Hutchinson, Sec.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready).

Meeting, July 12, Huut's Shop, Ocean Road, Mr. J. S. Dixon chair. Members wish to thank the Rev. Mr. Gills for his kindness in lending for our show St. Thomas's Institute, Denmark-st. New members elected: Messrs. C. Purvis, J. Cleghorn, J. M. Walker and E. Waters, Sunderland; J. Baxter, Hebburn. Agreed unanimously to take new members for our Young Bird Show until July 22 for this year only. We will hold a meeting at 2 in St. Thomas's Hall for proposition. Judging commences 2.30 by Mr. J. Risebourgh, of Sunderland.—J. W. Watson, Sec.

N. YORKS. & S. DURHAM FED.

Meeting, Little Regent Hotel, Stockton, July 10th. Full complement of Secretaries and representatives present from Stockton, Hartlepool, Darlington, Redcar, Guisbro, and Middlesbrough Cage Bird Societies; Chairman, Mr. Watson, Hartlepool. Arranged to hold two open shows over at Hartlepool, Nov. 8th, and over at Darlington New Year's Day. Schedules discussed wherein fanciers are well catered for. Champion classes: Canaries 22, British 12, Mules 2, For. 2, with usual classes for Novice Fed. members. Efforts are being made to secure best available judges. Officers elected for ensuing year: Chairman, W. Watson, Hartlepool; Sec., B. Smurthwaite, Norton: Treas., W. Nicholson, Stockton.—B. Smurthwaite, Sec.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Meeting, Oldham Hall, July 13. Mr. Ewan chair. Six new members accepted. Correspondence read from Messrs. R. W. Roberts, Bray and Lonsdale. Many members have promised to attend the outing to Otterspool Gardens, July 30. The item for the evening in the syllabus was "Questions," and members put some very interesting questions on their papers. It fell to Mr. McDermott to answer, "Which is the best way to breed winners?" which he did in a very admirable manner. Mr. Hart had to voice his opinion on "Hemp seed"; Mr. Abbot, "How to moult British Birds"; Mr. Scott, "Amalgamating Classes"; Mr. Bunner, "Training Young Birds"; T. R. Jones, "Bad Feeding Hens." The questions and answers proved both interesting and instructive, and all agreed that they had spent a very pleasant evening.—Thos. R. Jones, Sec.

NORTHERN Y.C.C.

Meeting, July 12, Shields Cafe, Bigg Market. Mr. T. C. Crawhall chair, and a very good attendance. Decided that we leave the patronage of our Society over until next meeting. Decided also to hold our annual show on December 2, at which there will be some very good special prizes. Anyone wishing to become a member will be given a hearty welcome. We are forwarding an order for show cages, and members wanting these should kindly let me know. Results of Nest Feather Show: Champ. Cl.: 1, Johnson; 2, 3, vhc, Crawhall; 4, Havis. Mkd.: 1, 2, Havis. WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

12th annual young bird show, July 4. Several members are with the colours, and the breeding season has not been at all a favourable one, so entries, 70, were down a little, but quality was up to standard. Mr. J. Robson judged. The president, Mr. F. Piper was among those present, and a good number of visitors attended. The arrangements were in the capable hands of the hard-working secretary, Mr. G. Griffiths, assisted by Mrs. G. Griffiths. The following also rendered service: Mr. L. E. Howard, Mr. A. H. Dyke, Mr. and Mrs. Farley, Mr. H. Smith, Mr. P. Rorke, and Mr. R. E. Collins.

READING C.B.S.

F. F. show Palmer Hall, July 12, 50 birds facing the judge, which, taking all things into consideration, must be thought satisfactory. Norwich comprised most entries, and some promising youngsters were to be seen, Mr. Larcom winning special for best in show, size being far above anything else exhibited. Mr. Wilson had a very nice cl. yell., which had won at Richmond the previous Monday. With a good moult it should turn out a good one. Yorks were not numerous, but some nice birds. Miss C. Garland taking special for best in show. She, too, had exhibited with success at Richmond, and no doubt will be heard of again at the annual show. Two very fine Linnet Mules bred by the late Sec., W. H. Pyke, and a few British, comprised the other classes. Mr. T. Yates judged and his awards appeared to meet with approval.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

Annual N.F. show, July 13, headquarters, Duke of York. Mr. S. N. Taylor judged Norwich and Mr. F. J. Weaver Yorkshires; both gave full satisfaction. A grand lot of Yorkshires turned up, and a novice member, H. Pritchard, won spl. best bird. Crundell and Rowley won the spls. best Nor., most points Nor. and best team; J. Gibbons spls. most entries and most points Yorks. Nor. Hen: 1, 3, Crundell and Rowley; 2, c, Hampton; vhc, hc, Weaver. Yell.: 1, 3, Crundell and Rowley; 2, Hampton; vhc, hc, Bendall; c, Weaver. CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

It really seems impossible for the City and Suburban A.C.B. to do badly. Even with the loss of their popular Sec., Mr Victor Wynn, and the present bad time for exhibitions, the members put up a first feather show, second to none. Entries totalled 173, and quality was of the usual high class seen at the Society's fixtures. This success is undoubtedly, in a great measure, due to the energy of the present Secretary, Mr. F. J. Martin, who is well known in the fancy for thoughly carrying out anything he takes in hand. The management was, therefore, all that one could wish, the youngsters were sent in over night, but well taken care of, Mr. Howick attending to the soft food department, and seeing that every exhibit had its due share. Norwich, as usual, headed the list. Spl. for best going to a thick set, cleanly feathered bird of Mr. Wills'. Messrs. Ayres and Sanders headed the Yorks. classes, and although Mr. Ayres staged the special winner, Mr. Sanders did particularly well, his youngsters showing a distinct improvement in type and quality. Mr. Pegg won in both the Border classes, his winning clear being an almost ideal example of the breed, beautifully moulded and feathered, with perfect wing carriage. As usual, the Novices put up a great fight, staging 16 birds in the Novice class and 34 in the Yorkshires; the latter required some separating, as type and quality were pretty even throughout. Mr. Brock staged the winner, an excellent buff of fine length. Mrs. Stopher's three winners in the amateur Norwich class were very much admired, the latter winning spl. for best lady's exhibit, and special best amateur. British were quite up to the usual standard, the spl. for best Hardbill went to Mr. Clark's Greenfinch, a fine bold bird of good feather; Mr. Knight winning the prize for best in section with his charming Waxwing. The attendance was as usual quite good. Mr. H. Norman judged.

IDLE C.B.S.

Second F.F. show, July 15, the Springfield Hotel. Owing to a number of the members having been called up for military service the entry was not over good. The quality generally was of a high standard. The clear yellows of Mr. Baxter were a remarkably fine pair of smart typical Yorkies, and should the second turn out to be a hen, which is possible, it will take some stopping. Mr. Thomas's yellow marked was another that filled the eye, and Mr. Chippindale's just a bit beyond its best perhaps, but a rare bird for style, as was Mr. Wood's buff marked. Mr. C. A. House judged. Yorks., Yell.: 1, 2, Baxter; 3, Wood; 4, he, Chippindale; vhe, Lloyd; c, Renton. Buff: 1, Chippindale; 2, Baxter; 3, 4, Sparks; vhc, Thomas; he, Wood; c, Lloyd. Yell. HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Annual young bird and British and Foreign bird show, Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill, July 8. Entries numbered 100, slightly less than last year, but very good considering many members have joined up. Mr. G. E. Weston judged. Competition for cup given by the judge was very keen, several members putting on full points; 30 other specials were divided between many members, the chief winners being Messrs. S. Turner, Wills, Walmsley, Lovegrove, Way, Mound, F. C. Knight, and F. Johnston. Quality was excellent throughout, showing good progress during recent years. Ch. Nor.: 1, 2, Lovegrove; 3, vhc, Wills. SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Nest Feather Shows, June 3, July 1. Entries were not so good as expected, but fanciers have had a disastrous season, some members having lost as many as 30 youngsters in a week or two, the severely cold nights in July accounting for a big death roll. Of course, it is quality and not quantity we want, and I am pleased to say there are still some very decent young left. June Show: Judges, Messrs. Swan, Canaries; Riseborough, Linnets. CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

Annual F.F. show, together with British and Foreign birds, Lamb Hotel, July 8, the largest ever held, close on 100 birds being staged. The quality of most of the birds was excellent, Messrs. Stubbs' variegd. Nor. and Mr. Madagan's clear buff Border—each winning the special for best bird in its section—were two gems, and with a successful moult should be often heard of later. Borders took first place in point of numbers with 34 entries, the other sections being fairly evenly divided. Special prizes were won by Messrs. King, Madagan (3), Pounsett, Stubbs Brothers, Cox, Treasure, G. Elstow, Hamlin, and Mrs. Madagan. Mr. J. H. Payne judged in his usual masterly style. Crests: 1, 2, 3, King; 4, vhc, Hamlin. Nor. Cl. DULWICH & PECKHAM C.B.S.

Annual F.F. Show, Reindeer Hotel, Peckham. The entry was hardly up to that of other years, but quality was quite high-class, the cream of the show being the Champion Yorkshire Section, and the Novice Norwich. The former contained two or three birds that are certain to do well in the future. Mr. A. J. Clarke staged a beauty in the Clear Class, and Mr. Hall a real topper in the Variegated, the latter bird winning the special for best champion exhibit. The Novice Norwich Class contained a dozen capital specimens, very level and true to type, and they required some sorting. The winner was a lovely buff, staged by Mr. Roberts, but it was in the Variegated Class that the special winner for the best Norwich was located, a bird of wonderful substance, with full head and cheeks, put down by Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Roberts' bird taking spl. for second best. The show was nicely arranged by Mr. Hodson and his helpers. Mr. H. is acting as sec., pro tem, during the absence of Mr. Cant. We hear that the Society had a great number of its members away, so that due credit should be given to those who are still assisting to keep the fancy alive. Mr. H. Norman, judged. CL. Nor.: 1, Gardner; 2, 3, Cole. Variegd.: 1, Gardner; 2, Reeks; 3, Cole. Yorks. Cl.: 1, 2, vhc, he, Clarke; 3, 4, Hall. Variegd.: 1, vhc, Hall; 2, 3, 4, Clarke; he, Reeks; c, Cant. WEST LONDON F.A.

Young bird show, headquarters, Windsor Castle, King Street, Hammersmith; Mr. R. L. Crisp judged, and he had a very nice collection of his favourites placed before him. Quality was present, but quantity absent. Nor. and Yorks. were well to the front for quality. Messrs. Butterfield and Chappell in Champ. Nor., Bonniwell in Amat. Nor., and Carr, Martin and Onslow in Novice, had some very fine specimens that ought to do well for their owners. Messrs. Bonniwell, Dewhurst and Clarke had the cream of the Amateur Yorks, and Messrs. Dyett, Starsmeare and Onslow in Novice British, as usual, were quite up to the standard. Class 1: 1, spl., 3, vhc, c, Butterfield; 2, spl., Chappell. Class 2: 1, 2, Chappell; 3, Butterfield. Class 3: Yorks.: 1, 2, 3, Clarke. Class 4: 1, he, Dewhurst; 2, 3, vhe, c, Clarke. CRYSTAL PALACE & PENGE C.B.S.

Annual F.F. Show, July 12, Alexandre Hotel, Penge, a spacious room kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. A. Hutton, who saw to the erecting of the staging required for the ninety odd birds. The Society has a considerable number of members away, but those left are making every effort to keep things going, and the number of visitors attending the gathering is good proof of the effectual way in which they are doing it. The quality of the birds advanced immensely this last year or two, and the young ones at this venture were quite of high class. The novices put up two well filled classes in clear Yorks. and clear Nor., the winner in the former being Mr. Ramsey's yellow that did so well at Wimbledon, he was closely pressed by a good one owned by Mr. Humphries, who also staged the winner in the variegd class. There was not much competition in the champion class, Mr. Hutton leading with a grand stylish buff of good length. The quality of the Novice Norwich should make things lively at the Annual; the winner was owned by Mr. McIntyre, but others were almost equal in merit, and will perhaps turn the tables with a good moult. Mr. Last, Purley, staged a few good Borders, but unfortunately competition in this section is not so keen as formerly the Breeders being affected by obstacles. The few British birds were excellent, Mr. Gullis winning the special for best exhibit in show, with his charming Bramble, in the pink of condition and beautifully staged. Mr. Fryett, as usual, had everything in excellent order, and the show generally was a big success Mr. H. Norman, judged.

NORTH LIVERPOOL C.B.S.

It is well to note the new names amongst the list of prize-winners at the second Nest Feather Show at headquarters, July 8. Considering the rather poor breeding season a total entry of 140 affords the management ample satisfaction. Sec Holden. Vice-Chairman Leadbetter, and those energetic stewards, Messrs. Foxcroft, Hammond, Kelly and Fairclough, saw that the benching of the birds was speedily and satisfactorily done. Judges were Messrs. T. Rowlands and J. Lobb, and right well they judged. Champ. How I Bred Gouldians in a Cage.

By Miss Butler, Rickmansworth.

I have kept many foreigners, large and small, for some years, and shall now give an account of how my Gouldians nested, though I confess the Gouldians are by no means my favourites, as I find them uninteresting on the whole.

One October I put two pairs of Gouldians in a large cage with a wire partition in the centre, having previously fastened in a corner of each division a 1lb. wooden tea box with the lid (which was a sliding one) three-quarters open. Inside each box I put an ordinary rush Canary nest.

Unfortunately, I had not a strong red-headed hen, but I had seen a beautiful red cock singing to and paying attention to a fine black hen, so I put the couple at one side of the cage, and at the other side I put a fine black cock and a red and black hen (partially red).

They fought so furiously through the bars that I had to fix a sheet of cardboard against the centre division. Even then all was not smooth sailing, as the cardboard did not completely shut off one corner (it bent over), and though they both started diligently to build their nests, they dropped many a beakful of building material, for if they chanced to see each other when flying to the nest they immediately went for each other, naturally dropping all they were carrying.

However, little by little they got on, both pairs working diligently, and then the hens disappeared regularly into the nest. After a time the red hen commenced to sit, but I noticed that the red cock remained in the nest quite as long as the hen. After a while he would not let her sit at all, but always hunted her out and even fought when she tried to get in. This went on for some time, until at last, as the hen began to look very unhappy, I took the nest away and found eight eggs in it; five were in the nest and three pushed over the edge into the box.

The other pair were a model couple, and in due course two beautiful youngsters appeared. I think she had two more eggs that had got pushed over the edge. The cock fed the young beautifully the whole time, with fresh lettuce and millet and canary seed. It was a delightful sight to see parents and young ones bathing the first day I put them out in the sun.

Twitterings.

Mr. H. Boothman, of Manchester, will judge the N.F. Show of Leigh C.B.S. to-day, Saturday.

The Croydon and Dis. F.A. has elected Mr. H. Norman to judge at the Young Stock Show, Aug. 16; a record entry is anticipated, writes Mr. J. A. Halhead.

By a printer's error Mr. W. Lidgett, whose article on the Great Lemon-crested Cockatoo appeared in our last issue, was stated to be hon. sec. of Norwich C.B.S. This should be Newark C.B.S.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Crested Canary Club should communicate with the Hon. Sec., T. Heath, 28, Kenilworth Court, Putney, on or before the end of July. They must confirm to the club's requirements as to the classification and judge.

Societies requiring the patronage of the Northern Yorkshire C.C. should apply to Robt. Havis, Hon. Sec., 16, Clifford Street, Blaydon-on-Tyne.

The members of the North Liverpool C.B.S. visit Otterspool Zoological Gardens, on July 30, and friends are invited to join. Meet at bottom of Royal Street at 1.30.

Ilkeston C.B.S. F.F. Show is being held to-day, July 22, at the Erewash Hotel, Station Road. Birds will be staged at 5, and all fanciers are invited writes Mr. T. Smith, Sec.

At the young stock show, held July 12, at Alexandra Hotel, Penge, writes Mr. W. D. Fryett, hon. sec. Crystal Palace and Penge C.B.S., there were 76 entries, and the balance was 7s. 6d. on the right side.

It is interesting to know that the Reed Bunting has been newly named by our soldiers, writes Mr. J. Alderslade. One of the wounded soldiers who visited our show at Eastleigh called it the Trench Lark.

I have been elected as sec. and treasurer to the South London Columbarian and F.A. in place of the late Mr. Luckham, and all communications respecting the Society should be addressed to me, writes Mr. W. Whitman, 9, Cranbrook Road, St. John's, S.E.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Northern Norwich Plainhead Club for the coming show season please apply as early as possible to F. W. Laidlow, 55, Colston Street, Benwell, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Owing to the state of affairs only a reasonable classification is necessary for patronage.

THE PRIZE QUESTION FOR THE WEEK.

As announced in our issue of July 15, the question for this week is, "What is your favourite Canary, and why?"

A prize of half-a-guinea is offered for the reply which, in the opinion of the Editor of Cage Birds, is the best sent in.

Answers must be accompanied by a coupon cut from this week's issue, and must reach the office of Cage Birds, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., not later than the first post on Tuesday next, July 25. The coupon appears at the foot of this page, and the Editor's decision must be accepted as final.

Next week's question will be, "What advice and instruction would you give to a beginner in Canary breeding?" Answers to this question must be accompanied by a coupon which will be published in our issue of July 29, and must reach us not later than the first post Tuesday, August 1.

This competition is quite distinct from the one in which we are offering six guineas in prizes.

OBITUARY.

It is with much regret, writes Mr. A. S. Treasure, hon. sec., Cheltenham C.B.S., that I inform you of the bereavement which has befallen two of our members. Mr. W. Pounsett, assistant hon. sec. and show manager, mourns the loss of his wife, who passed away July 14. She took a keen interest in everything connected with her husband's hobby, and always rendered valuable assistance at our annual shows. Mr. Hayling, our vice-chairman, has received the news of the death of his son, who was killed in action in France last week. I feel sure that the sympathy of our members and the large number of fanciers with whom they are acquainted, will be extended to them in their trouble.

BIRD-KEEPING MADE EASY.

In this issue there commences, under the heading "The Essentials of Aviculture," a series of articles which we have no hesitation in saying will be found of absorbing interest and incalculable value to bird-keepers.

In their entirety they will embrace—
The Housing of Birds.
The Feeding of Birds.
The Management of Birds.
The Diseases of Birds.
The Breeding of Species.
The Breeding of Mules and Hybrids.
The Birds Themselves.

Every item will be practical and thorough, and the keeping and treatment of every kind of bird will come within the scope of the series. Readers will confer a benefit on their birdy friends by calling their attention to these very instructive articles.

Whiffs of Home.

"Woodbine," says in the "Aberdeen Journal," "To many a one now toiling in the heart of some great city, or may be fighting on the battlefields of France and Flanders, it may be the Cuckoo's welcome notes often awaken long-forgotten memories of the dear old home of childhood." The signature to the letter, we think, will be responsible for much the same thing.

The members of the Halifax O.S. will have their last ramble of the season to-day, July 22, to Arden Woods. Train leaves Halifax at 1.50 for Wilsden. Friends are invited to join, and may see other particulars in the Club Notices column.

I have resigned the position of chairman of the Pontypool C.B.S., writes Mr. W. D. Lewis, Holyoake-terrace, Abersychan, Near Pontypool, and am taking up the position of sec. as Mr. H. Vaughan is leaving the district. In future all communications should be addressed accordingly. The position of chairman is being taken over by Mr. Reg. Smith, of Coedcae, Pontypool.

Capt. John Macfarlan Charlton, Northumberland Fusiliers, the author of several works on ornithology, including "The Birds of South-East Northumberland," has been killed in action. Capt. Charlton, who was only 25 years of age, was the son of Mr. John Charlton, Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was promoted captain in 1915, went to the front in January of this year, and was killed on July 1.

Our Six Guineas Competition.

We would remind our readers that the time is getting near for the closing of the competition in which we are offering prizes amounting to six guineas. Full particulars were given in our issue of July 8, so we need only say here that the competition closes on Tuesday, August 1, and that prizes of a guinea and half-a-guinea will be given for the best and second-best article in each of the four sections of bird-keeping:—Canaries, Mules or Hybrids, British birds, and Foreign birds. Envelopes should be endorsed "Competition," and should be addressed, "The Editor, Cage Birds, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Charity Show at Sheffield.

Dr. Craig writes that the Annual Open Show of the Sheffield O.S. held Nov. 3, 4, next will be in aid of the "Star and Garter" Fund. A ten-guinea trophy will be given for the best unflighted Yorkhire Canary.

We Didn't Do This.

The writer of Natural History Notes in the "Yorkshire Post" says: "At the time of writing I know of a Dipper's nest containing eggs. It is built in a cranny in the rocky roof of a cavern which gives birth to a rippling stream, with its ceaseless music. In this ideal spot I have seen a Dipper's nest for the last fifty years (without a break). Are the tenants of to-day the direct descendants of those occupiers in the days of long ago? If so, this must be (h)entailed property."

The Catcher Caught.

When a fly is in the neighbourhood of a Spotted Flycatcher it is generally bad for the fly. When, however, the fly is an artificial one it would seem to be bad for the Flycatcher, for it is reported that on the bank of the River Pang, near Reading, a Flycatcher struck at a fly-hook which had been caught in the boughs of a tree, with the result that the hook held the bird fast until it was released by an onlooker who had to ford the river for the purpose. The bird flew off on release, "apparently none the worse for its adventure."

Why Does the Skylark Sing?

A writer in the "Holloway Press" propounds this conundrum, and then says: "I was always under the impression that the Lark sang because of its gladness of heart or joy of life, but now I think its song serves a double purpose." After describing the finding of a Lark's nest, and the manœuvres of the parent birds, the writer concludes: "Evidently the male bird sings to let its mate know that 'All's well,' and alters its song when danger approaches, and perhaps by its singing hopes to make the passer-by look up and miss the nest at his feet."

A Useful Year Book.

The year book of the National British Bird and Mule Club is to hand. It contains a list of officers; rules of the society, notes for hon. secretaries; a list of British birds with their Latin names, and letters showing whether they are migratory or resident; show classifications for British birds, arranged to cover any number of classes from 9 to 30; classifications of from 6 to 14 classes of Mules or Hybrids; members names and addresses; and a list of "possible crosses." It is to be noted that no crosses between insectivorous birds are given among these. Surely crosses between some insectivorous birds, for example, the Thrush and Blackbird, are at least "possible." Perhaps the word "likely" would be better in such a list than "possible." The classification lists for Hybrids would seem to admit of being put more clearly. Under the heading "For six classes" only three classes are given, under "seven or eight classes," only four classes are specified, and so on.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long, practical experience. Terms moderate.

THOS. BENNETT, Judge of Cage Birds; life experience; terms moderate: 14, Cumberland-rd., Lidget Green, Bradford.

J. W. BRUCE, Coldstream. Judge of all varieties of cage birds; Border and British Bird specialist. Terms moderate.

W. A. COWGILL, 115, Washington Street, Girlington Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

GEO. GARDNER, 11, Haverstock Road, London, N.W. Judge of all kinds of Cage Birds.

G. HOBBS, 35, Queen's Road, Northampton, having retired from business, can judge Canaries and cage birds. 40 years breeder and exhibitor. Terms moderate.

J. HOLROYD, 27, Kingswood St., Gt. Horton, Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

J. R. HOUGHTON, 21, Hatfield Road, Gloucester; judge of Canaries and Cage Birds; specialist in Norwich; terms moderate.

C. A. HOUSE, Briardene, Idle, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and other Cage Birds.

J. W. METCALFE, Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool. Judge of Cage Birds, Specialist Yorks. and Norwich; terms moderate.

W. MUNDELL, 6, Carlisle Place, Manningham, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds.

H. NORMAN, The Eyrie, Salisbury Road, Carshalton, Surrey. All varieties of Cage Birds. Specialist Hybrids and British Birds.

J. PATTERSON, Chirnside, Judge of Cage Birds; all varieties. Wide, practical experience. Specialist Border Fancy Judge.

J. H. PAYNE, 17, Northgate Street, Gloucester, Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Cage Birds.

C. E. SILK, The Aviaries, Emsworth, Hants. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Life experience.

JAMES STANGER, 59, Grange Terrace, Felton Fell, Co. Durham. A.V., Spl., Nor. and Cr.

HENRY TAMS, Orchard Place, Longton, Staffs. Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Birds. Twenty-five years' Breeder and Exhibitor.

S. TICKELL, 22, Honey Street, Bodmin. Judge of all varieties; specialist Norwich, Cinn. and Liz. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. VARDY, The Aviaries, Hucknall Huthwaite, Notts. Judge of all varieties; specialist in Norwich Plainheads. Life experience. Terms moderate.

J. WILCOCK, The Fountain Inn, Eccleshill, nr. Bradford. Judge of Cage Birds, all varieties

G. WILSON, 14, Frizington Rd., Frizington, Cumberland. Judge of Mules, Brit., For. Specialist, Brit., Mules. Life experience; terms moderate.

W. YOUNG, 25, Grosvenor Road, New Brighton. Judge of Cage Birds. Life experience. Terms moderate.

Nests and Song in July.

"If the Thrushes have been silent," says "W. C." in the "Manchester Dispatch," "they have now recommenced their song, and in the evening they may be heard serenading their mates hatching out the late broods. I have found several newly furnished nests of not only Thrushes and Blackbirds, but of Chaffinches and the rare Goldfinch in Cheshire."

Worse than a Galah!

At the last meeting of the South Australian Ornithological Association, held in the Royal Society's rooms, Adelaide, many members expressed their regret at the wholesale destruction of Galahs (Roseate Cockatoos) by means of poisoned fruit, and "looked forward to the time when the Commonwealth Government would recognise that Australian native birds were not only wonderful but of the greatest economic value." English birds, however, did not seem to be so much in favour, for the report goes on to say that a long discussion took place in reference to imported birds having taken the place of indigenous ones. The majority of the members seemed to think that the imported bird would always be a pest, and his bad traits override his good ones.

The Painted Bird Trick Recalled.

A score or so of years ago it was not at all uncommon to be accosted by an innocent looking individual who had a wonderfully plumaged bird in a paper bag, and a wonderful tale to tell of how it had accidentally come into his possession. These gentry were always looking for someone more innocent than themselves who would part with some money for the bird and promise to give it a good home. Of late years the dodge seems somehow to have fallen out of favour, but it will not be surprising if it is revived, for it is said that ready-painted Sparrows are now to be had for the catching. The vapour from pieric acid, it appears, will permanently dye any light coloured bird, and render its plumage of a bright golden colour, and as there are villages in which the manufacture of this is now being largely carried on, golden Sparrows are plentiful in some parts.

"CAGE BIRDS" PRIZE QUESTION COUPON

22 JULY, 1916.

To be pinned to the answer, and forwarded to reach the Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., not later than 1st post, Tuesday, 25 July.

The Essentials of Aviculture.

By J. W. NEWSOME (Westfield.)

A Series of comprehensive articles, which will embrace the proper management of all kinds of birds in captivity. The housing, feeding, general management, diseases, breeding of species and of Mules and Hybrids, and finally, the birds themselves will all be treated of as the series progresses.

THE HOUSING OF BIRDS.

SUCCESS in aviculture depends principally on a sympathetic knowledge of the customs and characters of the birds in one's possession, and the application of this knowledge, even to the smallest detail. It is in the question of housing that the man who has followed the life of his charges, both in the fields and in books, finds himself amply repaid.

Unfortunately, we can only offer our captives a very inferior substitute for their natural conditions, but, even so, their lives can be made healthy and happy with very little trouble and expense. The nearest approach to nature we can give them is the outdoor aviary, and, unless the birds are intended for exhibition, it is the ideal abode. No bird shows to the best advantage in a cage and their beauties are greatly diminished unless they are in a state of comparative freedom. Even the exhibitor to whom steadiness on the perches is of the highest importance will find that if the birds are allowed to moult in the aviary, the colouring which results will be far superior to that accomplished by cage moulting.

In it one follows the lives of the charges from season to season, the mating, the making of the nest, the rearing of the young, and all seem so much more real if taking place in more or less natural surroundings. Again, he who has a number of birds to store, will find the outdoor aviary the cheapest and easiest to manage. For ailing birds it is the medicine par excellence, and very many foreigners, even those classed as delicate, live, thrive, and multiply amongst its branches. The above reasons will show why I deal with the outdoor aviary first, so now let us consider its construction.

The Outdoor Aviary and Its Construction

The outdoor aviary consists essentially of three parts, viz., a shelter house, a closed flight, and an open flight. Anyone who has a few yards of ground to spare can erect one, and in many gardens there are existing structures which are well adapted for the purpose and only require some wood and wire to complete the erection.

As an instance of this, one of the best small aviaries I have seen, had a large disused pigstye as its beginning, the yard of which was made into the flight, and planted with evergreens, flowers, and grasses. Chicken runs, summer houses, and out buildings are all suitable for conversion, provided they can be made wind and water-tight.

The situation is of prime importance. If placed against a wall it will be cheaper to erect, and also warmer. The ideal aspect is South East, but anything a little East or West of this, is quite suitable. A North or North West aspect is, of course, to be strictly avoided, as it leads only to failure. The size of the aviary must depend on its owner's pocket, but a simple plan is to have one third shelter, one third covered flight, one third open flight.

The main framing should be constructed of two inch square quartering, and slaters' battens do excellently for the cross pieces. The shelter and roof can be made of matchboarding which can be bought tongued and grooved, and very little skill is needed in erecting it. Wire netting of half inch mesh should be used for the flights; anything of a larger mesh is false economy, and annoying losses will take place from time to time if it is employed.

The roof, which should project about three or four inches over the main structure, can either be tiled or covered with felt on which tar and sand have been poured. This is quite a simple operation, the only points to remember are to be quite sure the tar is hot before pouring over the felt, and that the sand is thrown on while the tar is still wet. The main structure of the aviary is now complete.

A window can with advantage be let into the shelter, but remember to have wire netting fixed in the inside so that in the case of a breakage the birds are still safely within. The partitioning of the shelter from the flights may be done in various ways. If placed on an exposed position, tho whole can be boarded up with the exception of a small window about two feet square which is closed at night or in bad weather.

Another way which answers equally well is to leave about two feet from the ground open. The birds when they go to roost settle fairly high and so escape the draught. When the door is to be fixed have it as small as possible, and near the ground, leaving plenty of space above it, because when the birds are startled they fly high, and, if the door were a large one, there is a possibility of an inmate escaping.

In painting the aviary, much the most satisfactory plan is to have it either quite dark, or else white. Greens and other colours of this description do not seem to be at all lasting, and very soon get shabby. A very dark brown, to the last coat of which some varnish has been added, is very suitable, but for those living in the country nothing is so effective as white. It seems to show up the plumage of the birds to greater advantage than any other colour, and if flowers and ferns are planted round the aviary it becomes a thing of beauty instead of an unsightly building.

The above is a description of an aviary which is eminently suitable for both English and foreign birds. Of course, many modifications of this may be necessary. For instance, in a very small building it would not be advisable to have an open flight. Birds very often love to sit in the wet, and if they have not sufficient space to exercise in, they do not get dry before going to roost, with the result that many die; in this case the whole of the roof should be boarded over. In still smaller aviaries, the shelter house can be dispensed with, and either a wooden or glass front put on at night. Here the sides should be made of wood, but as this type is only a glorified cage it is much more satisfactory to have flight cages and put them out in fine weather.

For the More Ambitious.

On the other hand, the aviculturist may want more than one flight. For this, it is not necessary to have separate shelter houses for each, but simply to have a central one divided into as many compartments as there are flights, with small windows leading into each. This type is very suitable for the man who breeds many varieties, and he will find it the cheapest in the long run. A more elaborate structure where expense is no object, and where numbers of birds, both British and foreign are kept, is the following:—

Against a wall a long wooden house should be erected which, inside, can be divided into separate compartments with half inch wire netting, leaving a passage of about four or five feet between them and the wall. Outside, flights can be made to correspond exactly with those inside, the two communicating by a window, while other windows are placed in the roof, and the building heated if necessary. At one end is the room for storing and preparing food, etc. This is a very suitable type for the well-to-do amateur who wishes to keep all kinds of birds, including the more delicate species of foreigners, as having the inside and outside flights the inmates are quite independent of the weather.

The fitting of the aviary will depend on the ingenuity of the owner. The enthusiast will make one a real picture and a source of pleasure to everyone. It is quite impossible to give detailed instructions of how to do this, but if the essentials are described and a few ideas of ornamentation suggested, it will serve as a ground work on which more elaborate plans can be built.

The avoidance of a direct draught through the aviary is of fundamental importance, and as one of the ends is usually open wire, some means must be devised to prevent this. A plan which I have found useful, and which does away with the necessity of erecting an unsightly structure, is this:—Collect a large amount of furze and heather. Pass tho stalks of this through the wire-netting from within outwards, and so thatch it up to the top. This can be continued with great advantage round the back of the aviary, and serves the double purpose of keeping the inside cosy and warm, and also gives the birds something on which they can give full vent to their destructive powers, to the benefit of the plants inside.

The Furniture of the Birds' Home.

The seed utensil should take the form of a hopper. This can have a drawer underneath for the old husks, but a visit should be paid every day to see that the seed is not covered up by these, as so many birds have the habit of dropping the husk on top of the seed. This is an important point, as so many people have the idea that filling the hopper once a week is quite sufficient. Hoppers are now made with a number of feeding holes, and divided off into compartments; thus a mixture of seed need not be used, but the various kinds can be given at the discretion of the keeper. The back is fitted with glass so that a glance shows if it needs replenishing.

For soft food, the hopper described by Mr. Norman is that generally used, and will be found to be everything that is required. It is a box with sloping top and half of the front closed up. Between this lower half and the top are wires of sufficient distance apart to allow the birds to get their beaks through easily, but, once in, they cannot indulge in their favourite amusement of throwing their food about. The floor is continued out in front for a few inches to catch any small pieces that drop off. An ordinary china dish such as can be bought at any bird store for a few pence will do admirably for the food, and the back of the hopper can be on a hinge to allow of easy access. In the case of a small aviary where the birds are greatly disturbed by anyone entering, the back may be entirely done away with, and the hopper attached to the side of the aviary, the back corresponding with a small door let into the woodwork.

To Circumvent the Mice.

In regard to the question of placing these hoppers, it is here that one stops to consider the methods of dealing with one of the two pests of aviary life, namely mice, the other is cats, with which I shall deal later.

If there is one thing a mouse likes better than any other it is canary seed, and wherever there are birds there will the mice congregate, very often in the first twenty-four hours. The loss of the seed eaten is not such a great matter, but the fact that birds will not touch any food on which a mouse has been, makes us take stringent means, if not to eradicate them, yet to see that they confine their attentions to any seed dropped and not foul the principal seed vessel.

The best means to do this is to hang the hopper by a wire from the roof, taking care that there are no jumping off places anywhere near; or another plan is to have it set on the top of a pole about three or four feet high, the first 18 inches or two feet of which is covered with tin. To keep down numbers the ordinary penny break-back trap is as good as anything, hut, of course, on no account is this to be placed inside the aviary.

A method in favour with many fanciers is to spread bird lime thickly in the form of a horse-shoe on a piece of wood. The opening between the ends should be just large enough to allow a mouse to pass. At the other end some bait such as canary seed, musty bacon, cheese, etc., is placed. This has the advantage that numbers can be caught at the same time, but, with a little care, these animals should not prove too much of a pest.

The drinking water should be in a vessel in which the birds cannot bathe. There are many forms of fountains on the market, many of them costing less than a shilling, and a perusal of a dealer's catalogue will usually give ample choice. This can be hung or stood in any part of the aviary, but it is just as well to keep it away from the direct rays of the sun, and the water will be all the sweeter.

An All-important Accession.

For the bath there are almost as many different utensils as there are types of birds. The essentials are that it should be shallow, and that it should not have slippery sides or bottom, so as to prove difficult for birds entering or leaving, as a bird that has once been scared in the bath will postpone his next one indefinitely. To prevent this the bottom should be covered with plenty of stones and the sides be as shallow as possible. With these stipulations the owner can construct one with the materials at hand.

Quite a good method is to sink a shallow basin in the ground, having plenty of growing grasses and stones all round. More stones can be placed in the bottom and the sides lined with moss. The water in this is easily changed by just pouring fresh from a watering pan, and the overflow will produce a luxurious growth all round.

Of course this is only of use in a big aviary, but it makes a very pretty and attractive bath. The dweller in the country who builds his aviary besides a stream of water can with little expense lead a small flow through it, and the antics of the birds like the Wagtails will amply repay him for his trouble. (To be continued.)

Co-operative Canary Breeding.

Some Misunderstandings Dispelled.

A meeting of the Committee of the Canary Supply Co-operative Association was held on Monday, July 17, at the offices of CAGE BIRDS. Present: Messrs. H. J. Fulljames (Cage Birds League) in the Chair, J. C. Birch (Queen's Park C.B.A.), H. W. Gutierrez (British Roller C.C.), J. Jeffrey (Metropolitan C.B.A.), and H. J. Kybert (East Ham C.B.S.).

Letters from applicants for the post of Organising Secretary were read, and the Chairman was asked to reply, the post to remain open until after the next meeting, July 24.

A letter from Mr. W. G. Harper, applying for five shares in the association, was read, and, after some discussion, it was agreed, on the proposition of Mr. Jeffrey, that shares of £1 be issued, 5s. payable on application, the remainder to be called up in instalments of not more than 5s. each. The shares to carry a dividend to be declared by the Board at the end of each financial year.

Mr. Kybert called attention to the wording of a paragraph in the published details of the scheme of co-operation, which read as though the Board were to be elected quarterly, and it was pointed out that this was a printer's error. The Chairman promised to have a correction published.

WE are publishing in this issue a selection of letters received in response to our offer of a prize of half-a-guinea for the best letter received criticising the scheme, favourably or unfavourably. We have purposely given prominence to those which point out supposed defects in the details of the scheme as published in CAGE BIRDS last week, and all the letters received will be submitted to the Committee for consideration. The result may be that some of the tentative propositions may be modified. Anyway, we may repeat that they were never intended to be absolute in their present form; they were published with the express object of inviting criticism, and this object has been attained. Further expressions of opinion are invited, and all will have earnest consideration; the organisation is for the general benefit, and all who have anything to say should not hesitate to say it.

The winning letter will be announced next week under the proper name of the writer. Several of the letters published this week appear, by desire, over initials or pseudonyms, but it will be obviously unfair to award the prize without giving the proper name of the winner. If, therefore, any competitor objects to the publication of his name and address as the writer of the winning letter, he must withdraw his letter from competition, and a notice to this effect must be received at CAGE BIRDS offices not later than Tuesday morning next, July 25.

It is no part of our own task to answer criticism, for the organisation is not being instituted for the benefit of CAGE BIRDS. It is a co-operative association governed, so far as the present is concerned, by a representative body of London bird breeders for the benefit of the bird-breeding community, and, incidentally, for the benefit of our country's trade. The part which CAGE BIRDS has taken is to initiate the organisation, to offer a room for the meetings of the Committee, and its pages for the publication, without charge, of the doings of the Committee. Further, Mr. Carl, the proprietor of CAGE BIRDS, has underwritten all the expenses of the organisation during the first six months, and in doing this he pointed out to the Committee that it was for them to deal with the future with a free hand.

At the same time, we think we shall not be going outside of our province if we refer to one or two points raised in the letters published this week, in order to repair as quickly as possible some misunderstandings which appear to have arisen. It seems that the paragraph referring to the membership fee has been read to mean that the £1 would be an annual charge. This, we are sure, was never in the mind of Mr. Usher, who drew up the scheme, and it is as certainly not so interpreted by the Committee.

No enterprise can be started without capital, and the capital necessary to put this organisation on a sound basis is to be found by issuing shares of £1. The money so raised will be used as working capital, and a dividend in the way of interest, large or small, according to the success of the organisation, will be declared yearly.

This interest will form a charge upon the yearly profits, and the balance of profits, after paying working expenses, will be available for division among those who have sold their produce through the association, in proportion to the trade which they have done.

A person need not be a member to trade with the association, but if he is not a member he will not participate in the annual division of profits; he will take his first profit, and will have finished with the association until he makes another deal.

Further, a member need never trade with the association at all unless he wishes; he becomes a member by the purchase of a share or a number of shares, and he will receive as interest on his money a dividend to be declared by the Committee. If he does no trade he will take no trading profits; that is all. Members who do trade with the association will share in the annual bonus, in addition to receiving interest on their shares.

One of the paragraphs published last week began thus: "The association should be governed by a Board meeting elected quarterly by members." This is a delightful example of what has been described as a "derangement of epitaphs." The words "quarterly" and "elected" were transposed by Mr. Printer, and his pleasantry was passed unnoticed. The paragraph should read: "The association should be governed by a Board, meeting quarterly, elected by members," which is quite a different thing. This explanation, we think, will dispel any misunderstanding.

The consideration of other points raised in the letters published is a matter for the Committee at the next meeting.

The First Application for Shares.

The honour of being the first applicant for shares in the Organisation belongs to Mr. W. G. Harper, of Muswell Hill, London. Mr. Harper writes: "I am quite sure that the idea of capturing the German Canary trade is bound to be a success if it is backed by CAGE BIRDS. As a firm believer in co-operation, I shall esteem it a favour if you will put me down for five shares, and I shall be pleased to have more later on."

WHAT FANCIERS THINK.

A Friendly Criticism and Some Useful Suggestions.

SIR,—The preliminary scheme for organising the Canary trade, as set forth in last week's CAGE BIRDS, is certainly an interesting one, but lends itself to criticism, I think, on several points.

It is based, first and foremost, on the supposition that we can obtain 50,000 birds to sell at 5s. each in the course of the first year. My first criticism is that no evidence is offered that these birds are to be had.

Now, the greater part of the first year's estimated expenditure appears to be an annual one; whereas the "membership fees" are, presumably, only capital subscribed, and, therefore, not renewed annually, so that, on the figures given, we have only £60 as dividend on our capital of £1,000. Not a very satisfactory position if we cannot be certain of the 50,000 birds.

On the other hand, every 10,000 birds above the 50,000 would bring in an additional £250. If, then, we could get 60,000 or 70,000 birds success would appear assured. How is this to be done? Only by the whole-hearted support of all and every Canary Society, in breeding, collecting, classifying, and despatching to the Central Depot every available bird.

How can this support be obtained? Not, I think, by requiring them to pay a heavy "membership fee" of £10 or £15; they would certainly think a good deal before doing so. I would say rather, by asking for quite a nominal subscription from them to become affiliated to the parent body, and by asking them to appoint a "Sales" Secretary, who would take a small percentage as remuneration for his trouble. This "Sales" Secretary would collect all available birds monthly, or as required; he could classify the birds roughly into, say, three classes, subject to revision at the Central Depot, and he would be responsible for the despatch of birds to the Central Depot.

Now, with regard to the £1 shares. This, I think, is unnecessarily high. I would prefer 2,000 shares at 10s., with a limited number to each applicant, in order to keep the scheme co-operative in nature. If evidence were forthcoming that a sufficient number of birds could be obtained, there is little doubt that the shares would be very quickly taken up.

My last point is that in a scheme of this far-reaching nature, those dealers who now export any quantity of birds are bound to be seriously affected, and their opposition must necessarily be expected. This raises the question whether it would be better to sell by auction to the dealers the greater part of the stock, directly exporting only a small part of it as a control of the prices given by the dealers.

But, however the birds are disposed of, the great point is to get them; and by organising the societies in some such way as I suggest, the largest possible number would be obtained, and a regular supply could be arranged.

"HOPEFUL."

Prospects Not Sufficiently Alluring.

SIR,—The general outline of the scheme appears to be sound and workable, and to be of a bold and striking nature. Inasmuch as one of the aims of the venture is to obtain the co-operation of the smaller breeders, certain criticisms at once suggest themselves. In the first place, a membership fee of £1, which may be well within the reach of the larger breeders, is far too high for the smaller man, whose support it is hoped to obtain, and it is no great advantage to the smaller man to have the balance of his membership fee—assuming he pays 2s. 6d. on entrance—deducted from the proceeds of his sales unless the deductions are spread over a number of years.

Further, Mr. Usher does not appear at all certain that the deduction of 10 per cent. from birds sold through the depot will meet the expenses and leave a sufficient margin for profit; nor is it at all clear whether this 10 per cent. allows for cost of packing, etc. If it does not, a further deduction will have to be made from the average selling price of 5s. per bird; and, in addition, the cost of carriage from breeder to depot, and an allowance for possible loss of stock en route, must not be overlooked. Assuming that a small breeder sells to the depot ten young birds in the first year, his receipts are, say, 50s., from which must be deducted 20s. for membership fee, 5s. for depot expenses, and, to take a cheery view, not less than 1s. for carriage and risks. The net receipts are, therefore, 24s. for ten birds.

It is certain that such returns will afford no allurements for the small breeder, especially as no allowance has been made for rearing expenses; and it must be obvious to anyone that, unless better terms are forthcoming in the first year, the scheme will fail to secure the co-operation of those whose sympathy it is desired to enlist.

"BUCHAN."

Why Not a Limited Liability Company?

SIR,—As a great lover of Nature, and particularly of bird life, and having taken a keen interest in the proposed scheme for ousting the Huns from the Canary business, I have great pleasure in giving you my opinion and friendly criticism of Mr. F. T. Usher's scheme.

Firstly, Mr. Usher deserves the thanks of all, for his suggestions display much thought and great ability. The scheme being one of boundless possibilities, must, to be successful, be run on thorough business methods and financial lines.

Bearing this in mind, I venture to suggest that the scheme be launched on the limited liability principle. Mr. Usher thinks that, roughly, £1,200 would be necessary for the first year, then why not issue shares of £1 each for that amount. I venture to think that there are business men as well as breeders who would support such a company, and surely the enthusiastic fanciers would be willing to subscribe to that extent.

I now proceed to the management, which Mr. Usher suggests "should be governed by a Board, elected by the members every quarter." Here I respectfully differ very considerably. The members of the Board, or Committee, however formed, should be members of that body for at least twelve months, or, even better, two years, and the Chairman, in any case, should certainly retain his position for two years. In this case the Chairman would be very closely in touch with the entire business of the concern, and his Board being elected for a more lengthy period would also be conversant with all matters. A fluctuating or migratory Board, such as one serving three months only, would be a great source of anxiety and trouble to the Chairman and permanent officials, and a hindrance to the smooth working of the business.

Again, in working strictly on commercial and not philanthropic lines, members or shareholders would sell their birds to the company, and would not expect either assistance or anything else except their dividends, and, according to the figures estimated by the Secretary, the dividends should be handsome.

The suggestions "to allow fanciers to pay 2s. 6d. only, and the remainder of the £1 to be collected from the results of their sales," "and the proceeds of sales be left at interest with the company," would be impracticable, and entail a very considerable addition to the clerical work. Of course, this outlined scheme would not allow of cage bird societies getting the benefit of twenty members for £10, but local societies could invest, and pay for a number of shares for their own members, and then (the local society) accept the half-crowns and collect the further instalments as they fall due.

With regard to the purchase by the company of Canaries, I should be interested to know who is to act as valuer, and would the company take a number of birds, irrespective of merit, at a fixed price, or would the same have to be submitted to the manager for approval?

As a novice, and small breeder of the "Wee Gem," I am intensely interested in the scheme, which I hope to support, and which I trust may be eminently successful.

A. J. WORROLL.

Mr. Bastock Wants a National Exhibiting Society.

SIR,—I have read with interest the details so far of this scheme, and have come to the conclusion that it is unworkable, by reason of its elaborate extravagance. When you take into consideration that many of our local societies consist of from 20 to 50 members, with a subscription of from 2s. 6d. to 6s. per year, payable monthly, so that the working fancier shall not feel the loss, how can you expect a society to pay a membership fee of more than double its income? Then you suggest a 20s. membership fee, and put it down at a low estimate of 1,000. I question if you could get 50 to join at such a subscription. You then go on to say it would be a benefit to traders. If you are going to trade in birds it must injure our dealers, more or less, and I venture to say no dealer would join such a society. Then you say the demand exceeds the supply; this I believe, and that we want some scheme to encourage breeders to go into cage bird breeding on a more extensive scale. Personally, I think we want a National Society whose object would be to encourage, and look after, fanciers and the Fancy, but the subscription must not be more than 2s. per year; then you may get a 1,000 members. The society to hold an annual exhibition of cage birds, with extra classifications and good prize money, with specials, to encourage fanciers to join in producing more birds.

The majority of breeders are working men, and when they sell their surplus they want to know what they are going to get for it, and spot cash. They would not send them to any depot and wait weeks before they knew what they were going to get for them, and commission stopped for this and that. Fanciers like to put their own price on their specimens. The demand will cause dealers to offer better prices, this is my opinion.

Moseley. J. BASTOCK.

Sound Philosophy.

SIR,—I think Mr. Usher has rendered a signal service to Canary breeders by outlining a scheme for discussion. One may be unable to follow the suggestions made, but if an association can be developed from the approximate data furnished, a real step forward will have been made.

I am inclined to think difficulty will be experienced in raising the capital required, and although it may be found advisable to begin on more modest lines, even then I do not think it will be an easy task. Breeders at the present time do not have much difficulty in disposing of fairly good-class birds, still I realise that this matter ought to be viewed in a broader light, and not from a selfish standpoint. I take it that the principal object is to encourage the breeding of birds, and I should think the organiser's energies would be directed more particularly to that end in the early stages of the association's existence, and then, as production increases, and it becomes more difficult to find remunerative markets, the depot might be introduced with advantage to all. To expect to be able to handle successfully nearly 1,000 birds per week in the first year or so of the association's existence, is taking a very optimistic view.

Confidence in the association will be a work of time, and here the abilities of the organisers will have ample scope. The work of the Organising Secretary may make or mar the whole undertaking in its early days. To get the proper man for the post will need all the care and discretion the Committee can give in this matter. He must be a man with tact and organising power, a convincing speaker, a good judge of birds, and a man whose name will carry weight in the bird world. In addition, he must be blessed with endless patience and perseverance.

The position will not be a sinecure for many years to come, yet I cannot help thinking that to the right man, who sees clearly the splendid opportunity it will give him to raise a structure of national importance, the prospect cannot but be alluring.

Help of a very far-reaching kind will undoubtedly be given to him by the use of your columns, and one that must be of incalculable benefit, by being able to reach practically all present breeders. My idea would be to raise a much smaller capital, principally from existing societies, and, in the first instance, get the organiser at work spreading knowledge and creating interest in Canary breeding as a hobby, and helping novices to purchase good healthy stock to begin with. Once interested, I think many would be willing to pay a commission for real help of this kind.

Confidence once gained, and never abused, would be an asset of the association so long as it existed. But this will take time, and if the expenses are going along too heavily during this period, when the structure begins to take real shape it may be found too heavily handicapped with financial troubles to become of real utility that might otherwise have been the case. Wishing the scheme every success.

T. C.

Some Figures that Talk.

SIR,—My idea of your co-operative scheme is that it will benefit the breeder of common Canaries and song birds, with exhibition breeders to finance it. For instance, take the songster breeder, with no outlet for his surplus, and put his stock at four cocks and eight hens, which should average forty youngsters in the season, say, twenty cocks at 5s., and twenty hens at 1s. 6d. These are dealers' top prices, and would produce £6 10s. Now we will take off cost of keeping the same for one year: 112lb Spanish canary seed, 33s.; sundry seeds, 6s.; egg and bread or biscuit from May 1 to August 31, 2½d. per day, £1 5s.; total, £3 4s.; leaving a profit of £3 6s.

Now for the breeder of exhibition birds. We will put his stock as near on a level as possible, say six cocks and six hens, which should produce 36 youngsters, for which he can always find an outlet if he exhibits same. Now we will split these up on a level, as above, and say 18 cocks and 18 hens. On the meagre average for exhibition specimens of 10s. and 5s. these would produce £13 10s. 112lb. canary seed, 33s.; sundry seeds, 7s. 6d.; colour food, 5s; eggs and bread or biscuit, May 1 to September 31, 2½d. per day, £1 11s. 3d.; total, £3 16s. 9d., showing a total profit of £9 13s. 3d., which, no doubt, would be considerably augmented if the selling of the stock were done on a co-operative scheme, as on page 397 of CAGE BIRDS. These two tables are worked on the assumption that both parties have the stock birds to commence with.

F. STOTT.

A Dublin Reader Thinks it is an "Addled" Egg.

SIR,—What do I think of the co-operative scheme? Very little indeed! I'm afraid it's an addled egg—that nothing will come of it. It strikes me that its own parents have no idea what kind of a monstrosity they are trying to hatch out, for a monstrosity it certainly would be, even if I am wrong in describing it in its present form as an "addled egg," and monstrosities rarely live long.

The best advice to give a person intending to go in for breeding Canaries for profit alone would be "Don't"; the game's not worth the candle; but, if you are fond of birds, you will find in it a fascinating, and occasionally, very occasionally, a profitable pastime."

We are told that there is a shortage of Canaries at present, on account of the absence of the German birds from the market, that the prices now being realised are exceptional. How much are they above the normal? Still, we are informed by the Committee that good birds can be purchased at present to commence operations with at 9s. per pair. It is now too late to think of doing much in the way of breeding this season, as the moult will soon be upon us; it therefore follows that the offspring of these birds will not be moulted and singing till the latter end of next year. By this time I think it is quite reasonable to assume that the war will be over, and the German birds will be on the market again, and the prices down once more to the pre-war level. Not only will the prices decrease, but, if there is to be the depression in trade predicted by so many to follow the war, then the demand might reasonably be expected to fall off also.

I rather doubt if a thousand breeders will be found willing to subscribe a pound towards such an organisation; they may promise to do so, or, at least, half that amount through their societies, but I don't envy the treasurer's task of collecting the cash. The Committee expect to get an average of 10s. per pair for the birds sold in competition with the Germans, whilst good birds can be bought at present for 9s. per pair with the Germans out of the running. Really high-class birds would hardly find their way to the depot; they could, I imagine, be sold without its assistance; but let us assume that they were to be found there, would fanciers give the high prices a fancier with a reputation is able to command for his stock for an unknown quantity at its face value?

Again, the owner of a good bird might not care to send it to be sold at someone else's valuation; nor would it do to let the owner place his own price on them—the good points of a bird are not always apparent to other people. If this organisation is to be of any use to the Fancy, I cannot see how it can possibly avoid coming into conflict with traders, to allow the latter to send in their stocks would defeat its own object. Dealers, as a rule, know better than to breed their birds. To be of any use it must enter into direct opposition, and, I think it should, first of all, endeavour to capture the home trade. It should supply the fancier with all his needs in the way of seeds, cages, and appliances, at a reasonable price, and members would receive a bonus or discount on all purchases. The Association should manufacture its own cages, and endeavour to put on the market a distinctive cage, guaranteed British made, and to contain a British-bred songster. It is only by capturing the profits reaped by the dealer and putting them into the pockets of the breeder that I can see any hope of the scheme being a success.

Incidentally, it might make efforts to have the importation of Canaries stopped; this would increase the demand for the home product. At the same time, I can quite understand that the Editor is not at all anxious to fall out with the traders; the amount spent by the latter on their "Wanted" advertisements must form a substantial amount in a year. This, in itself, should make breeders think. But what claim has the trader on our sympathies, Mr. Editor, if those "exquisite songsters from the Hartz Mountains," with their "wonderful trills," "water bubbles," and their "nightingale's jug-jug," etc., which he so glowingly describes, are only "miserable and unhealthy wasters"?

Capturing the German Trade.

SIR,—In your report of the last meeting of the committee dealing with the above subject I notice there has been propounded a scheme, practical in itself, and full of possibilities, a scheme which, I think, will take on, and be the best possible means for providing the cheap Canary, which, no doubt, has formed the bulk of the German trade in bygone days. As to the production of a good article, I think we already have that part well in hand, yet I should advise that section of the Fancy to wholeheartedly throw in their lot, and render what assistance they can, inasmuch as it is bound to bring grist to the mill for that side of the Fancy. "Nothing succeeds like success"; and assuredly this scheme, in its dual capacity of finding suitable work for our married Tommies whereby to earn a livelihood and a means of stimulating the Fancy, has not only justified its inception by its good start, but promises to open up in a remarkable degree further avenues for the betterment of that side of the hobby, the production of high-class stock. With such a unique committee at the head of this scheme, it appears to me as a welcome opportunity, and it will no doubt prove to many a new starting-point in life. I, therefore, sincerely hope that the appeal made by our Editor through CAGE BIRDS for every assistance possible will meet with the success which it deserves, viz., a hearty response.

SIR,—I am very pleased to inform you that Mr. Gordon Stewart, of Ipswich, has been good enough to accept the presidency of the above society. Personally, I feel we ought to consider ourselves very fortunate in having the services of such a gentleman at our command, as a more ardent and hard working fancier of the Norwich Plainhead Canary it would be most difficult to find. If the members will only stick to their guns, and do all in their power in co-operation with Mr. Gordon Stewart and myself in these trying times, I feel that the future prospects of the society are well assured.

Half-guinea Specials for Selling Classes.

SIR,—I am very glad that "Sub Rosa," in his article on inbreeding in your issue of July 8, has brought up the matter of selling classes, as it gives me an opportunity of bringing my views before the readers of CAGE BIRDS. I have had the honour to be made president of the Eastern Counties' Cage Bird Society, a club run by working men, and very decent fellows they are too. It has occurred to me that if I guaranteed the full prize money as paid at the Palace or the Horticultural Hall, plus half-a-guinea special for the best cock, and half-a-guinea for the best hen Norwich Plainhead in two separate classes, the selling price to be at least a pound, perhaps some of our big breeders will think it worth while to send us something worth looking at.

I shall have to ask your kind assistance later on, Mr. Editor, to draw the attention of the Norwich fancy to the little show in Ipswich in December, it is only a members' show, with two open selling classes, but I hope to do something in the near future to put Ipswich in the place it used to occupy in the Norwich Plainhead fancy. Now I will be very grateful to any reader who will make suggestions. It is a difficult time and much valuable help can be given by those in the know, and it will assist us to avoid mistakes.

Wake Up, Newcastle C.B.S.

SIR,—A few days ago I met the Secretary of the above Society, and he was very much distressed at the condition of the club. It appears there is a good balance, plenty of cups, and other assets, but the membership is dwindling, and at the last meeting only himself, the Chairman, and one other member turned up. As one of the founders of the Society, and an official from its inception till last year, I would not like to see it go down, and I appeal to all past and present members to turn up at the next meeting, which I understand Mr. Reid is shortly calling, and see if new life can be brought into it, and the Society restored to its former prestige.

Crimson-wing x Rosella Parrakeets.

SIR,—I am pleased to say that I have in an outdoor aviary a cock Crimson-wing Parrageet (aprosmictus erythropterus) paired with a hen Rosella Parrakeet (Platycercus eximius). and that they are now busy sitting. The last time I peeped into the nest, early last week, they had eleven eggs. Of course now it is a case of "wait and see" as to whether the eggs are fertile or not, and in the meantime I shall be glad if any reader can say whether the Crimson-wing has been known to breed in captivity, either with a hen of his own species, or by a cross. I am also glad to say that I have in the aviary a pair of Rosellas bringing up a nest of youngsters for the fourth year in succession.

H. EARL.

[We do not know of any record of the breeding of Crimson-wings, but the King Parrakeet has been crossed successfully with the hen Crimson-wing. Perhaps some reader will oblige with the information desired.—EDITOR, CAGE BIRDS.]

A Timely Hint on Colour Feeding.

SIR,—Now that the time is near for this important performance to be done, a few hints to fanciers may not be out of place. In the first place, you must look out for the best samples, for what is good in one season is inferior in another. The sweet pepper is most in favour; personally, I prefer a little hot mixed with it, for I think it digests better, and brings them through the moult more quickly. A good sample of pepper should be finely ground, extra deep in colour, and pleasant to the smell. I always used to mix my own, and was very successful; the following is the way I did it. I got samples from different wholesale houses, picked out that I liked best, and to 1lb. of sweet I put 3ozs. of hot and an eggcup full of oil, either sweet, cod-liver, or linseed oil will do; I like the latter. After well mixing I store in a jar or tin. To one egg add three good teaspoonfuls of this colour feed and three spoonfuls of moist sugar, and see that it is mixed well. I consider it best to mix it at night for next morning's feeding, and in the morning for afternoon feeding. Give small quantities, and often, to obtain best results.

J. BASTOCK.

[A sample of colour food mixed as described was kindly forwarded by Mr. Bastock with the letter. It was of very fine colour, tasted only slightly pungent, and seemed eminently suitable for its purpose.—EDITOR, CAGE BIRDS.]

Young Birds Feeding Young Birds.

SIR,—It may interest the writer of the letter headed "Young Thrushes Feeding Young Thrushes," to know that Greenfinches will do the same thing, and are doing it now for me. I have three about nine weeks old, and they are just on hard seed and are rearing seven younger birds. This has been my experience not only this year, but for three years in succession, one bird rearing five young three years ago.

If I may, I would like to mention that I consider the Greenfinch the best British bird one can possibly have as a cage pet, and it is very easy to feed and keep. I have six from another nest and I have let them out every day for a fly round, and they always return for their food. The other fellows in the company think it is wonderful, and have never seen birds so tame before, but, of course, they do not keep birds themselves, and consequently they do not know how much pleasure it gives one to be the happy possessor of a few feathered pets even if they are common. I would rather have a Greenfinch than any other British bird, but I have reared a few Softbills since I have been stationed here, though I was unsuccessful in my attempt to rear Nightingales. I should be very glad, therefore, if anyone having reared these would let me know through our paper how he fed them. Other Softbills I have reared down here are Thrushes, Pied Wagtails, and Spotted Flycatchers.

Cage Birds Roll of Honour.

SIR,—Will you kindly mention in your Roll of Honour the death of Mr. C. Baker, of Marlow Road, Anerley, whose death is reported from Mesopotamia. We believe it occurred during the siege of Kut, as he died in April, and the news is only just through.

A Liverpool Party to Have a Sunday Afternoon at Otterspool Park Zoo.

SIR,—I am organising a party of fanciers and friends, ladies included, of Liverpool and District, to pay a visit to the Zoological Gardens, at Otterspool, Aigburth, on Sunday, July 30. Meet at Aigburgh Car Terminus, at 2 prompt. Fanciers of Liverpool and District who would like to avail themselves of this opportunity of visiting the most interesting collection of birds and animals at Mr. Cross's place, are requested to send on their names to me, so that I may have some idea of the number likely to be present. Refreshments can be had inside the grounds, and the caterers would like to know the probable number of the party. This proposed visit has been very well received by a large number of fanciers, but there are many who may not have heard of it, and whom CAGE BIRDS, I am sure, will reach.

A Bird that Would Not Go Away.

SIR,—Amongst an aviary of birds which I recently bought was one which puzzled me. It very closely resembled an ordinary House Sparrow, but it was olivaceous on the rump, and had other characters which led me to think it might be a Greenfinch-Sparrow hybrid. I took it to a London show in the hope of getting the opinion of the judge, but he had left the show, and was not expected to return. The members who saw the bird pronounced it to be a Tree Sparrow, but I am not so sure, neither are a lot of my friends.

I was a bit disgusted, so gave the Sparrow to a young friend to throw up near to the Coldfall Woods, where he lives. He tells me he did so by letting it fly from his bedroom window, but, much to his surprise, he found the bird would not leave the vicinity of the window, and fed on some seedling rape that was sprouting there. The strange part about it was that the bird came in every evening to roost inside the room, roosting on the curtain rod, and as the bird did not seem to want its freedom, he has decided to cage it once more.

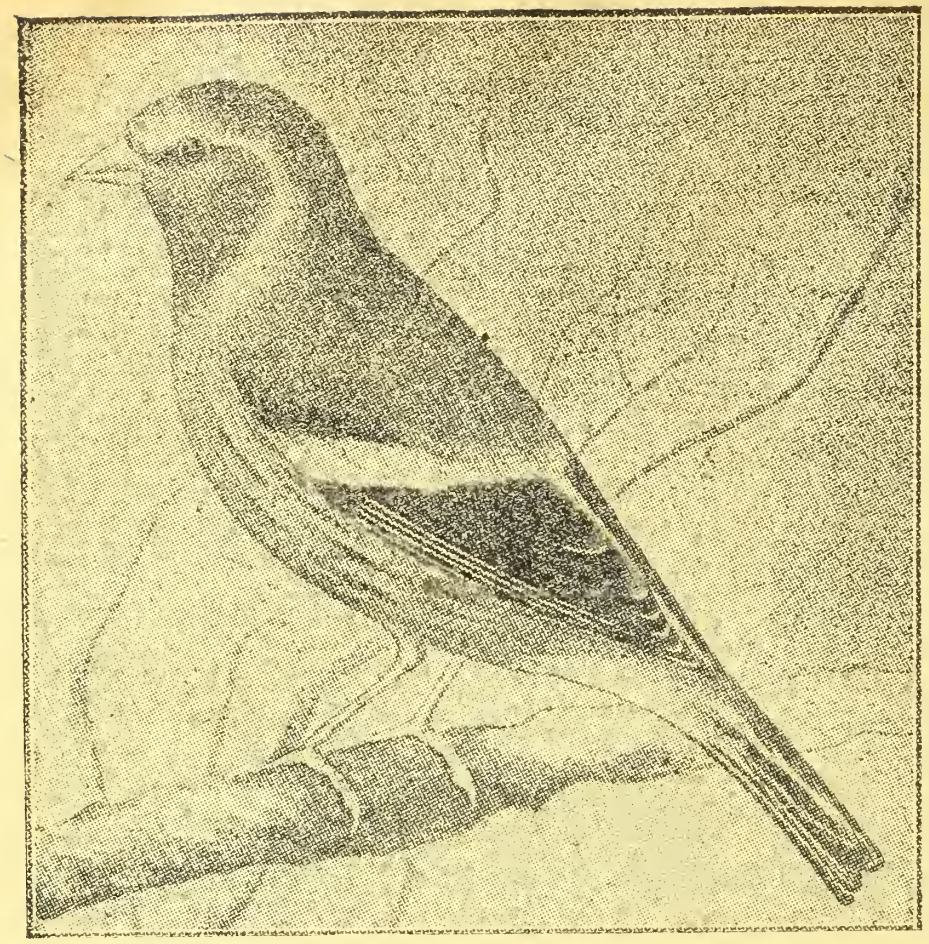
Experts Fail: Novices Succeed.

SIR,—Many hints, from time to time, on the so-called sweating hen have appeared in CAGE BIRDS, and the article concluded July 15, by Mr. H. G. Hill, on this most vexed point is, in my opinion, one of the best, if not the best, definition of the real meaning of the term "sweating hens," or, as I would rather say, sweating nests, as I feel positive the vapour is derived from the foul nest, made so by improper treatment, as already thoroughly expounded by Mr. H. G. H. I do not know this gentleman, but I take off my hat to him with thanks.



Mr. Allsopp contributes a most striking article on the breeding of the Goldie-Linnet Hybrids, which proves once again that one may work ever so energetically, and, after many years, throw down the tools and count it all a failure, while his brother fancier, a novice, more than likely will come along, as it were, pick up the discarded tools, and make an easy success.

In November, 1915, I purchased a cock and hen Bullie which certainly had not been caged more than a month. The hen I handed over to a friend fancier here, Mr. G. Veal, and it was put with a black-legged Goldie, captured at about the same period, and turned into a roughly-constructed flight, under and around which was a run for my friend's fowls. In April this pair of birds began to show signs of breeding, and a nest pan was hung against the partition, as one would do in the ordinary method of breeding Canaries. It was quite exposed in every way, but the hen at once commenced to carry materials supplied her. Three eggs were laid, and a young Goldie-Bullie was hatched the second week in May. I watched her feed it, mostly from soaked wheat and young turnip tops, and she kept it alive up to seven days old, when it died, as I am more than sorry to state. She at once laid another clutch, and Master Goldie pierced them. She is now sitting again, this time building a very large nest in a bush recently supplied her, and I hope things will work out better, but I think a Greenfinch hen, as a feeder, would ensure better chances.

A BEAUTIFUL BRITISH HYBRID.

Among the many beautiful birds which fill the Hybrid Section of our bird shows perhaps none is more admired than the Hybrid which is the result of mating the cock Goldfinch and the hen Bullfinch. A good example of the cross is shown in our picture, but colours are needed to give an adequate idea of its beauty.

How Bird Societies Can Help their Members.

By the REV. C. B. JOLLIFFE (Cardiff).

On June 20 the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe put a question to the members of the Cardiff C.B.S.: "What Advantages can the Society offer its Members?" The lecturer proceeded to answer his own question, and in doing so pointed out methods which should appeal not only to the members of his own society, but to those of every other in the Kingdom. By the courtesy of the Rev. Mr. Jolliffe we are enabled to reproduce the lecture for the general benefit.

IT would form a subject of considerable interest if each member of the society would relate the story of how he first became a member. It would be a matter of even greater interest if he would put on record how in the process of things he survived the disappointments of the breeding season and the show bench; and why, in spite of bad luck and discouragement, he is a fancier still.

Of all alluring hobbies perhaps none is taken up so enthusiastically, and none is ever laid down so regretfully as the hobby of Canary and small bird breeding and exhibiting.

There are many graces mentioned in the Bible, and I sincerely hope most of you possess them all, but I venture to say that the fancier who is to stay the pace, and finish the course, will need one extra to them all, viz., the grace of stick-at-it-ness. Sooner or later there comes to all the day of disappointment when "old hands" and "raw novices" alike feel like "chucking it all up"!

How to save the fancier in this hour of despair is one of the main features of this paper, and, if I am right, the supreme duty of the society is to nurse and help its members in every hour of difficulty, and to give encouragement to one of the most innocent and beautiful hobbies that man or woman can take up.

Probably one of the first questions addressed to anyone who is endeavouring to persuade another to join the society, is—"What shall I get out of it?" However attractive the something-for-nothing business may be, the nothing-for-something proposition makes a very poor show.

The society which exists only to take subscriptions, to get a good gate at its shows, and make a financial success each year, and has little or nothing to offer its members in return, is sure to meet the day of trouble and possible extinction. The society whose chief aim is not a financial one, but an endeavour to offer something visible and tangible to its members, need never fear the lack of financial support.

Some of the suggestions I shall offer are obvious to all save the extreme novice, and beyond merely stating them I shall leave them for fuller treatment and expansion at some future date. Forgive me if I drop into the sermon style and arrange my paper, as we parsons say, in the form of a three-decker—social, educational, and financial.

The Social Advantages the Society Should Offer.

Never more applicable should the adage be—"Birds of a feather flock together"—than to fanciers. I am perfectly amazed at the number of people I meet who keep small birds as a hobby. Has it ever struck you that the circulation of CAGE BIRDS is nearly 50,000 per week? Fancy, 50,000 people in the United Kingdom, more than one in every thousand of our population, whose interest in caged birds is so great that they can afford twopence per week for a paper wholly devoted to their hobby. Think of the many, many thousands outside the above who only keep a Canary, often in conditions detrimental to its health and song, and you have some idea of the fascination of birds.

By the courtesy of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS I am informed in Cardiff and district alone the circulation of that most excellent journal exceeds 800 copies per week. Here, indeed, is a seed-plot well worth cultivating by the society. Surely we have something worth offering to these 800 people, something which shall attract, say, 500 of them into our membership.

Contrast a membership of 500 with our present 60 or 70. Think if we reduced our annual subscriptions to half-a-crown, what a revenue 500 half-crowns would bring in yearly. Imagine these 500 members coming to our annual show, and 500 Mrs. Joneses, and five, six, seven, or eight little Joneses—for this is the way they have of doing things in Wales.

Every member would want to be treasurer, and every committeeman would expect his expenses paid; even the judges would be asking for a war bonus, and the secretary would look after nothing but the society and his stock.

We are apt to overlook the individual who is a keen lover of birds, and who is proud to be the possessor of 12 to 20 birds in an out-of-doors aviary, but who has no time to breed show specimens, and who looks upon that particular branch of the Fancy as a business.

Usually you will find him a gentleman with a large heart, generous disposition, and a rare lover of nature. He muddles along from year to year, meeting with disappointment after disappointment, feeling again and again he has been "had" at the hands of dealers and others, and finally throwing it up with a belief expressed or unexpressed that the Fancy is composed of men whose motto is—"Do others or they will do you."

I am not drawing upon imagination, but speak facts, and if we can do anything to prove to such that all fanciers are not dishonourable, that there is an element of luck to which the matured and the novice are equally subjected, and that the best of us at times have no one to blame but ourselves for our disappointments, we shall have done something to redeem the reputation of the Fancy.

Companionship Good for All.

By his isolation this friend has failed to avail himself of that inspiration and sympathy that doubtless would have been extended to him had he been a member of the society and attended its meetings. I lay great stress on this latter fact, for experience has proved that failure in this particular has often created suspicion and discontent.

There are few, very few, who can paddle their own canoe in the Fancy. At Liverpool, some years ago, I was shown a small boat, 24ft. long, in which it was said a certain venturesome spirit had crossed the Atlantic from New York. Gentlemen, the day I cross the Atlantic it will not be alone. I guess I am too fond of company for that, and shall much prefer a liner.

I do not say that here and there you may not find a strong, independent soul who prefers isolation to friendship; but what I do maintain is that if anyone wishes to gang his own gait in "splendid isolation," let him, but for the rank and file continuance in the Fancy is best secured by union with congenial spirits, i.e., membership with the society.

This being so, what are we going to offer to all our members, the breeder of exhibition stock, and the simple lover of birds, especially the latter?

I suggest lectures on British and wild birds, their habits, foods, nesting sites, treatment in captivity, their possibilities as hybrid breeders, and how to rear their young. We should arrange rambles to view bird-nesting sites; for the identification of nests and eggs; and to learn the habits of wild birds, especially migrants.

Further, we can have exhibitions of birds apart from the element of competition. Of all the many thousands who travel miles to hear the Nightingale sing, how few have ever seen the bird? What more beautiful exhibit than a Tree-creeper well staged? Bring near to us the Woodpecker, the Spotted Flycatcher, and a few others.

Let some gifted, cultured, and expert ornithologists tell us some of the beautiful and charming things that can be told of British and other birds. I wonder how many know the Thrush's nest is not finished when the plaster of mud is laid on; that the final layer consists of a thin "veneer" of what one may call wood-paper—just as we humans cover the walls of our homes with wallpaper to hide the plaster; but the Thrush to keep out the wet and to bind the whole together

How many know that the common Wren will build several dummy nests in order to deceive the robber of eggs and nests, but will skilfully hide the genuine nest in the near vicinity? Let us have exhibitions of some of these beautiful nests—say, for instance, the pineapple-shaped nest of the Long-tailed Tit, or the exquisitely moulded nest of the Chaffinch.

"Behold a bird's nest,
Mark it well, within, without,
No tool to fix, no bodkin to insert,
No glue to joint—his little beak was all,
And yet how neatly finished! What nice hand
Could compass such another?"

How to Build up a Strain of Norwich Plainhead Canaries.

Good advice for beginners, given in a paper by Mr. C. Stubbs, and read before the members of the Cheltenham C.B.S.

I HAVE been asked to write a paper about Norwich Plainheads, so I have decided to give you my idea of what I think is the best way for a beginner to work up a good stud of birds.

In the first place, let me say it is better to have quality before quantity; it is far better to have two or three good pairs of birds than a dozen third-raters; you get more satisfactory results, besides being able to give them better attention. Remember, there is a lot of hard work in breeding Canaries, but, at the same time, you will find it a pleasure if you have got what is called "bird fever."

Now, as regards making a start, I think it is best for a beginner to join a society; he will there find plenty of fanciers who will always be willing to help him in making a start.

It is best for you to get your birds to start with from a man you know breeds his own winners, and ask him to put you up a yellow cock and two buff hens, also a buff cock and two yellow hens. I am not in favour of running two hens with one cock, but, at the same time, it is better to have a spare hen in case of accidents.

The Birds for a Commencement.

When making your selection, see that you get as much size as you can in the cock birds, as from them you will yet your size in the youngsters. The class of bird you want, but, at the same time, will find the most difficult to get, is one with plenty of depth and breadth, and a good round chest and back. He should have a good wide head, opening right away from the beak, and finishing well over on a thick neck.

As I have stated, it is a hard job to get a bird of this description, but you must try and get one as near as possible like it. The hens should be of medium size, short and typical, with plenty of quality of feather, as from the hen's side you will get your type and quality in the youngsters.

I myself have found that the large hens, as a rule, are very unsatisfactory during the breeding season; they either lay about one egg in a clutch, won't sit, or else they won't feed when they have got young. Of course, the larger the hen the better your chances are on the show bench, providing she has got all the other points necessary for a show bird, while, at the same time, if you can get a nest of youngsters from such a hen there is no doubt they will be of great value, if only for breeding purposes the following season, but I favour the medium-sized hen as stated.

When making your choice see that either the cocks or the hens are lightly marked; this will prove that there is that green blood in the birds without which you cannot get your colour, and no amount of colour feeding will put it there.

The Value of Unflighted Birds.

I should advise a beginner to have unflighted birds, cocks and hens; at all costs have unflighted hens. Much has been said about pairing two unflighted birds together, many fanciers saying it is a mistake, but speaking from my own experience, I have had the best results from two unflighted birds.

Last year I put out eight unflighted birds on the show bench, including the one that was claimed at Preston for ten guineas, and they were all bred with unflighted birds. However, nearly every fancier has his own ideas, and my advice is, if he is successful, whatever his methods are, stick to them, and keep on his own way.

Then, again, some fanciers say you cannot breed show birds from two show birds. Well, we don't expect to breed all winners from show birds, neither do we get them from what we call stock birds. I have proved that you can breed winners from two show birds, and if you go into a successful fancier's room you will find he pairs his best birds together, even if they are birds that have been winning on the show bench.

From two cocks and four hens a man can, by using a little judgment, and his brains, build himself up a good stud of birds in about five years, that is providing he gets his birds at the start from a good winning strain.

Don't, if you have the luck to breed a good bird or two the first season, be tempted to part with them; keep all your best, and with the experience you have gained you will be able to add another good pair or two to your stocks. Do the same the next season, and if you breed anything you fancy try it out in the novice class, and don't throw up the sponge if you are not in the running. Keep on trying, and you will no doubt succeed in time in getting a red ticket.

Another important thing is the mating up of the birds. It is no use going haphazard. If you have a bird with a weak head, pair it up to a bird with as large a head as possible, and the same thing applies to any fault your birds may have. Much more could be said about the Norwich Plainhead, but, unfortunately, I have not got the time at my disposal, so I can only say that if these few lines have been of any interest, I shall feel amply repaid for my trouble.

The Troubles of a Bird Buyer.

By R. BLINCOE (Rochdale).

ANYONE who has read the excellent articles which have appeared from time to come in CAGE BIRDS for so many years, also the handbooks, not forgetting the Nutshells, will approach the subject of British birds with a feeling that there is nothing new to say; but I notice that no one has anything to say about the difficulty of getting hold of really good show birds.

Most of the leading lights in the ranks of British bird exhibitors appear either to be big dealers who select their teams by the simple process of picking good specimens from the large number of birds passing through their hands or men to whom money is no object, and certainly the price of a team of ready made winners is enough to make an ordinary man gasp. As I have had some peculiar experiences in my endeavours to procuro really good birds, perhaps an account of them may be of service to others.

I began by offering special prices to catchers and others for picked specimens, but I very soon found this was no go; they most of them knew too much or too little, either not knowing a good one when they had it, or having a market, and any price they liked to ask, for a real winner, but one and all took my cash and sent me something sufficiently good to make a prosecution for fraud a doubtful transaction.

"Put Not Your Trust in Princes."

Just about this time a number of "British Bird Kings," and "Princes," were very prominent in the adverts of the day. Here was my chance; I would visit some of these potentates and select a likely team from among the thousands that filled their magnificent aviaries. So the very next holiday I selected a town where no less than three of them held their courts, and off I went in high spirits. Theso were somewhat damped on finding that the policeman to whom I appealed for information was unacquainted with any of their addresses, he, however, sent me to a gentleman who acted as a "bum bailiff," and who proved to have an excellent knowledge of their locality, and, following his directions, I soon arrived at the residence of No. 1.

There I learned from a lady (who from the absence of a wedding ring and the item of bed-room furniture she held in her hand, I took to be a woman of the bedchamber) that the gentleman was not at home. I was only saved from having to follow her very complicated directions by the timely arrival of the heir apparent, a young gentleman who reminded me forcibly of the famous conundrum, inasmuch as he had also no hair apparent, most of it having been destroyed by a particularly virulent ring worm.

Ho spoke with confidence of being able to find his "feythur" at the Pig and Whistle, and he proved a reliable guide, for I was soon in the presence of the "King" himself, who removed an exceedingly dirty clay pipe from his lips and received me with great condescension.

After hastily emptying his pint pot, and putting it where I could see it, he informed me in a voice of genuine regret that only the day before he had parted with a team of certain Palace winners at a ridiculously low figure, so I left him with a stamped addressed envelope, which I suppose he still has in his possession, and started out to find No. 2. This monarch's appearance was very similar to that of No. 1, except that his wardrobe was, if possible, more dilapidated, and he too, I found, had only the day before parted with a team of Palace winners.

As there was no train home for another hour, I determined to seek out No. 3, in spite of the fact that he was only a "prince." I am afraid his habits were not so regular as those of the kings, none of his family having the slightest idea of his whereabouts. I begged his good lady to let me have a look through his aviaries, which after some demur she did, and taking me upstairs showed me a box of wretched looking Finches, to which varieties he apparently confined himself. A pity, too, for if he had specialised in small softbills, there would have been no difficulty about the live food.

This satisfied me that dealing with kings is not a royal road to success, and on the very few occasions when I have been tempted to repeat the experiment I have always found that my pernicious habit of arriving exactly one day too late has stuck to me all through.

For some time I went on, contentedly buying an occasional fair specimen, and catching a decent softbill now and again, until one autumn, while on a fishing expedition, I met with a chap whose first name either was or ought to have been Mick. He assured me that the district was swarming with Goldfinches "sure ye can catch a thousand in a hour," said he.

A Liberal Discount.

I promptly made a mental reduction of this figure by 950, and trebled the time of catching, having had some previous experience, in my capacity of angler, of chaps with a brogue, and even this reduced estimate left room for further reasonable reductions.

A few mornings after saw me in a big field surrounded by a wealth of thorn hedges and low trees. I had provided myself with call birds and several boxes of bird lime, for I remembered having read some time before in CAGE BIRDS that every likely spot for perching should be well limed. As this would have taken several tons of lime I had to be content, however, with liming the most likely twigs, not forgetting to have a few twigs placed higher than the rest of the hedge. All preparations being complete, I lit my pipe and sat down to await results.

Fifty Goldfinches in three hours! I almost felt tempted to chuck up business and blossom forth as one of the previously mentioned kings, but I nobly resisted the temptation, and determined to remain a simple fancier, firmly resolving at the same time to retain only the very best specimens. All the remainder were to have their liberty again.

At the end of two hours I decided that an ordinary specimen, if a cock, would come in for muling. Another hour passed. Perhaps after all a very neat hen would be useful for hybrid breeding. Still the time went on. After all, it's hardly worth the trouble to catch your own; I would visit my old catcher friend and make a selection from his catch if he had any, for Goldfinches were evidently so scarce and wild that it was doubtful if even he with his skill at the game would have been able to succeed.

Professional Advice.

On the road home I met him, and as soon as I saw his face I realised that I had committed a grave breach of etiquette. He seemed to think it hardly possible that a respectable looking mug like me would have been so mean as to try and catch his own. I felt deeply ashamed of my conduct, and at once made the only reparation possible under such circumstances; I took him in and stood him a pint. At the end of the fourth pint he revived a little, and seemed to feel that I had acted more in ignorance than from depravity, and even went so far as to give me an invitation to go with him on his next catching trip.

I did too, and found out a good many reasons why I failed to get my fifty Goldfinches in three hours as estimated. In the first place, being early in August, the Finches were feeding on hardheads, and not on thistle as I had imagined. He also set his call bird and brace birds in the centre of a large field, well away from the hedges, and provided suitable perching places by sticking in the ground at intervals around them, branches of trees, suitably trimmed, and each bush containing a stuffed decoy, so that there was no difficulty in liming all the upper parts. We had not long to wait, he soon had a box full of Finches. No sooner did we see a black speck flying with a dipping flight, than up went the brace birds, and in less timo than I can tell it another was added to the collection.

The only thing I didn't like about the thing was the brace bird business; it may be all right with trained birds, but I doubt it. I shouldn't like any of my special favourites to act in that capacity for long; at the same time they are obviously the most essential part of the whole performance, but there is room for some ingenious person to invent mechanical substitutes, which would be much more satisfactory to any humane person.

ABERDEEN FANCIERS AT LAW.

A Disputed Challenge Cup.

Proof was heard by Sheriff Dudley Stuart in the Aberdeen Small Debt Court on July 13th, in an action by the Aberdeen Amalgamated C.B.S. against William Allison, The Brae, Cults, calling on the defender to deliver up a silver cup belonging to them, at present in the possession of the defender, and which he refused to do, although he had no right or title to retain it.

Mr. John Munro, advocate, appeared for pursuers, and Mr. G. M. Aitken, advocate, for defender.

Mr. Munro explained that the circumstances were that the Aberdeen Amalgamated C.B.S. was a society for the propagation of Canaries and other birds. At the annual exhibition and competition held in the Music Hall Buildings on 18th Dec. last there was, among other prizes offered for competition, a silver challenge cup for the best young Norwich bred by a member within a radius of eight miles of Aberdeen. The cup had to be won three times before it could become the property of the competitor. It had already been won in the years 1913 and 1914 by the defender. The defender entered seven birds for tho competition, and signed a certificate of entry agreeing to abide by the rules and regulations of the show. One of the birds entered by the defender was awarded the said silver challenge cup, which was delivered to him. The society had now ascertained that the defender did not breed the bird which was awarded the cup, and that it was neither bred by a member of the society, nor within eight miles of Aberdeen, having been bred, it was believed, by Mr. Lawson, Carlisle. The cup should not, therefore, have been awarded to the defender. It had not become his property, but was still the property of the complainers.

Evidence for the pursuers, taken on Commission, was read, and in this Frank Foster Lawson deposed that he was a bird fancier, and lived at 14, Pugin Street, Carlisle. He had been a bird fancier for 18 or 20 years. He was a fancier of Canaries only, and had had a good deal of experience of them. He had bred many of the Norwich variety, which was the only variety he bred. He knew Mr. Allison, the defender, and had met him perhaps three times in all. They had an annual bird show in Carlisle, which was usually held on the 27th or 28th October. They had the annual show last October, and he met the defender on the first day of the show, Oct. 27. They were in the show together that day. Defender was also at his house, and saw his birds. Witness had half-a-dozen birds or more exhibited at the show. He had the first prize bird in the class for yellow unflighted Norwich. The defender saw that bird in the show. That was the only place he could have seen it at that time. It was the case that an expert had not much difficulty in identifying a bird. He would know this first prize bird again six months afterwards. He exhibited the same bird at Blaydon-on-Tyne some time in November, and it also got first prize there. It was a very good specimen, a fair good size, and a good type, very fine quality, extra good in colour, and a good head; if it had a fault, it was in the way it carried its wings. It was inclined to cross them. He sold this bird to Mr. Allison, the defender. He thought that would have been about Nov. 18 or 20 of last year. He could not remember that there were any conditions attached to the sale. Since he sold that bird, he had not seen it till he saw it in the office of Mr. Aitken, the defender's agent. The defender was present when he identified it. He had no doubt the bird he saw in Mr. Aitken's office was the same bird that he sold to defender. He bred the bird, and there was no doubt in his mind that the bird he saw was the bird which he bred and sold to defender. After he sold the bird to defender he noticed he was taking prizes at shows in this particular class. He understood from reports that it was with this bird which he had sold him that he was taking the prizes, but the next time he saw the defender, he told him it was not. He had not seen the bird then. Shown a copy of CAGE BIRDS, dated Nov. 20, 1915, and referred to the report of the Blaydon show, witness deposed that this show was held on Nov. 12-13. He could not give the exact date of the Cowdenbeath show. He knew the defender got a prize in the yellow Norwich class at Cowdenbeath. The defender would have had the bird he sold him in time to show it at Cowdenbeath. The bird he sold to defender was hatched about the end of April or beginning of May last year. He had three hatchings last year from the same pair. The bird he sold to defender was a clear yellow Norwich cock. There were no marks on it that he remembered about. He washed the bird previous to showing it. If there had been marks upon the bird, he probably would have noticed them, and if he had known that this case was coming on he would have taken particular notice. He had 200 birds at that time, and one did not take particular note of all the little details in connection with them. He bred 100 young birds in a season. He made his livelihood mainly by breeding birds. A bird entered in "unflighted" class must be a young bird, bred the same year—a bird that had never cast its wing or tail feathers.

Ques.: You cannot tell us how old this bird was when you sold it to defender? Ans.: The nearest I can say is that it was hatched in the end of April or beginning of May, and that I sold it to Mr. Allison in November. It was not older than that. It was what might be described as a baby bird; it had just gone through its first moult. Ques.: Do these young birds change very rapidly in appearance? Ans.: Not after the first moult. They may change a little during the breeding season—tighten up in condition, and so forth, but not to any material extent. Even in the height of the breeding season they change very little, except that they might get into tighter condition. In the breeding season a little might be clipped off the end of the tail and off the vent; but even with all that, a bird in the height of the breeding season does not alter materially. Ques.: Will you tell us what there was about the bird you saw this morning which leads you to say that in your opinion it is the same bird which you sold to the defender? Ans.: To my knowledge it is the same bird. Ques.: What are your grounds for saying that? Ans.: It is a nice type and nice size, it has very good quality of feather, is extra good in colour, and has an unusually good head for a yellow cock. Ques.: Do you say that other breeders could not breed birds exactly the same as yours? Ans.: Well, there are no two birds exactly alike. Ques.: Do you say the bird has exactly the same appearance now, when you saw it this morning, as the bird you sold Mr. Allison? Ans.: The only thing I noticed was that there was a little clipped off the end of the tail and a little off the vent; but in other respects it is the same bird to the best of my knowledge and belief. Ques.: Supposing I tell you that the bird which you sold to the defender died, would you be prepared still to say that the bird you saw this morning is the same bird? Ans.: Yes, to the best of my knowledge and belief it is. Ques.: It looks the same bird as you sold to Mr. Allison; can you put it any higher than that? Ans.: To the best of my knowledge and belief it is the same bird as I sold to Mr. Allison. Of course, if the bird died, I must be mistaken. Ques.: Could you be mistaken? Ans.: No; that is the bird Mr. Allison bought from me. I quite believe Mr. Allison has exhibited birds at shows for several years. I do not know if he has taken prizes in the same class for years, but I can quite believe he has. It is quite possible he was able to take first prize in the same class before he bought this or any other bird from me.

Alexander Harris deposed that he had been a bird fancier for 20 years. He had been a judge of Canaries at shows for the last twelve years. Q.: To a man of your experience as a fancier, is it easy to identify a bird that you have seen before? A.: Sometimes. I was a judge of the open classes of Canaries at the Aberdeen Show on the 18th Dec. last year. I remember there was a class for unflighted yellow Norwich cocks. The first prize in that class went to a bird belonging to Mr. Allison, the defender. It was an easy first; there was nothing approaching it in the show. That was not my first acquaintance with the bird. I saw it in Cowdenbeath a fortnight previous where I was judging. This same bird took a first prize there. He was an easy first. He is an outstanding sort of a bird. Q.: Is he a bird that you would mistake if you saw him again? A.: If I saw him in the same condition as I saw him then I would not mistake him. I have not seen the bird again since I saw him in the Aberdeen show in December last. A bird was shown me to-day. It is a very good bird, but I would not swear it is the same bird as was shown at Cowdenbeath and Aberdeen. I would swear it is not. Q.: What is the difference? A.: The bird I saw this morning is only half a bird. It has not got a tail, and it is all plucked in the flanks. Q.: Could the bird you saw at Cowdenbeath and Aberdeen have its tail put into the condition you saw the bird this morning? A.: In another season after it had moulted; but not this season. Q.: But could it be altered to look like what it was this morning? A.: Yes, if its feathers were plucked in the flank and clipped in the tail. That is a thing that is usually done in the breeding season. Q.: Did you ever see the bird before that you saw this morning? A.: I have seen Mr. Allison's bird at Cowdenbeath and Aberdeen; but I would not swear that the bird I saw this morning is the same bird. I am not sure if I have ever before seen the bird I saw this morning. No bird in the Aberdeen show or in the Cowdenbeath show was equal to the one I saw this morning. There is all the difference in the world between the one I saw this morning and the bird which Mr. Allison took the first prizes with at Cowdenbeath and Aberdeen. As I have said, the one I saw this morning has a bad tail and is plucked in the flanks, and is not in the same condition. It is also paler in colour than the one I saw at these shows. I would expect it to be paler now. I do not think there is any difference in the head. Q.: So that, apart from the tail and the flanks, is there any difference between the bird you saw this morning and the bird shown by the defender at Cowdenbeath and Aberdeen? A.: Yes, it is a different type altogether; it is thin in the back end, and it had the short tail; and there is a great difference from the condition of the bird shown in Aberdeen. That is what would be expected at this difference of time. The outstanding features of the bird shown by defender in Aberdeen and Cowdenbeath were its shape, colour, and size. It was a proportional bird in every way. It had an exceptionally grand colour. The bird I saw this morning was a good coloured bird. It is not such a good colour as the one shown in Aberdeen and Cowdenbeath. There is not more difference in the colour since then than I would expect.

Cross-examined: In saying that it is only sometimes easy to identify a bird that you have seen before, I mean that you can only identify it if you get it in the same condition as you had seen it before. That is to say, if I see a bird to-day and see it again a month afterwards in the same condition, I could tell it to be the same bird. I could not very well identify a bird from having seen it in show condition, and when it was in the middle of the breeding season. A bird gets out of shape in the breeding season; it gets what is called "rank." There were no visible marks on the bird shown by defender in Aberdeen and Cowdenbeath. Before I would know the bird again I would require to see it in exactly the same condition as when I judged it. Even with all my experience I am not able to say that the bird I saw this morning is the bird which took the prize at the Aberdeen show. It is the case that a bird in its first year changes its appearance in the course of five or six months. Q.: Supposing you bred a clear yellow Norwich cock, hatched in May, and that you sold it in November, would you be able to identify that bird again in the middle of the following breeding season? A.: No, I would not say I would. I do not think it is possible to do it. I don't remember how many birds were put before me at the Aberdeen show in the class for the cup, and I don't remember who owned them. Q.: I put it to you that there were just four birds judged for this particular cup, and that all the four birds belonged to Mr. Allison. Do you recollect whether that was so? A.: Yes, I believe I do. I remember hearing about it. I remember now there were four birds put before me for the cup, and that the whole of them belonged to the defender.

CANARY QUERIES

NOT SINGING (E. C. W.).—Certainly, the bird being in a state of continual moult has very much to do with it not singing; perhaps everything. I note you say it is kept in a bright position, but not where. Do not allow it to hang in or very near a window, high up near the ceiling, nor in a direct draught. If it has recently made a fresh start at moulting, or is about to do so, keep it quite on the warm side, and keep a light cover over the cage to encourage the moult, and endeavour to get it through a complete one now that the natural season for the process is so near. Treat generally as follows, with this object in view. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, linseed and broken groats every second day, and on the alternate days give a morsel of bread the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, slightly dusted with natal pepper, or cayenne, and then sprinkled with soft sugar. After two or three weeks of this treatment make up a paste by well mixning on a hot plate a teaspoonful of cod liver oil emulsion, ditto of pure honey, as much powdered grain of paradise as will cover a shilling, and ditto of chlorate of potash, adding whilst mixing sufficient finely powdered biscuit to bring it to the consistency of soft cheese. When cold it will become a little harder and may be cut into cubes. Keep a cube stuck in the wires for the bird to peck at when it likes, for a month or so. When the feathers cease dropping add 20 drops of chemical food to the water two days in every three for a fortnight. This should suffice to remove the state of perpetual moulting, and when the bird has got over this the song will probably return quite naturally very soon.

SWOLLEN VENT (Clinelier).—It is not possible to be positive in such a matter without seeing the subject, but I am strongly inclined to think that the hen has a displacement of the cloaca, for which there is probably no remedy. As she is a good specimen it may be worth your while to show her to a veterinary surgeon and ask his advice. If this is what is wrong a slight operation may put things right, but I rather doubt her utility as a breeding unit in future. See that the bowels are kept rather free, but not too loose, by the addition of a sufficient amount of green salad to the dietary. I would not advise any further treatment on your own part until you are quite sure what is really the matter.

HEAD HANGS DOWN (Bird Lover, Dublin).—The bird is probably a weakly specimen and may have been a trifle injured in the nest or soon after leaving it. Treat as follows for a few weeks: Give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as staple diet, and in addition to this give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give instead half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle and broken groats. Give also a few wild seed heads or a little green food in variety daily. Keep a piece of cuttlefish stuck in the wires for the bird to peck at. In the water add, every second day for a week, ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and after this give instead 20 drops of Chemical Food two days in every three for a fortnight or so

YOUNG FEEDING YOUNG (A Belfast Novice).—It is rather unusual, but by no means a great rarity for a young Canary to take upon itself the task of feeding a backward member of the same brood to which it belongs itself. The parental instinct is very strong in some birds, and when there are some days' difference in the age of the first and last members of a brood, and the younger bird persistently begs for food after being removed to the flight, and the older ones can well fend for themselves, they will often come to the rescue of the youngster and feed it for a time.

PROCURING FRESH MATE (A.T.).—(1) If there is any tangible evidence of excessive inbreeding in the stock you would be well advised to get a mate from a fresh stud, to which there can be no objection whatever so long as you make a point of going to a breeder whose birds are trained to a similar type of song tours as the stud from which those you already have are trained. For instance, if your birds excel in singing hollow rolls, the stud from which you get the fresh stock should be similarly proficient, and so on. As regards the cock singing some of his tours very loud, it is just possible that this may be due to the excitement of the breeding season, or, perhaps, being left with the hen too much and so getting a little wild. In this case a few weeks in a song box at the end of the moult, until he gets in full song again, may correct this fault. (2) Sorry I cannot name a definite price for a young hen from a first-class strain. It is a question only to be decided by the vendor. It may be anything from 10s. upwards.

AVIARY TROUBLES (Perplexed, Derby).—(1) Your trouble with the young dying may be partly due to poor feeding hens, or, in the case of the green hen, to a non-feeder, but I think the real root of the mischief is your mixed collection in the comparatively small aviary. Several of your birds are not to be wholly trusted among breeding birds in small quarters. The cock Goldfinch, hen Bullies, and the Greenfinch I should be inclined to suspect of setting things awry. You may, of course, find many of these species that are above suspicion, but you want to know them before placing too much confidence in them. It is nothing unusual for such a mixture as yours to make a hash of things in the breeding line, and I have no doubt that you would have succeeded better by devoting attention to Canaries only. The only alteration I would suggest in your management is that for the rest of the season you give a little soft food daily, and also a liberal supply of half-ripe plantain stalks, trusses of seed heads of shepherd's purse, and similar wild things, so that the hens can have a larger choice of food when young are about, and also help to keep the attention of the Britishers occupied in another direction. Leave the birds as much as possible to themselves; do not interfere with the nests more than is absolutely unavoidable, and secure as much privacy for them as possible. (2) Certainly, let the hand-reared hen Linnet try to bring up her young herself. It is quite likely that she will do it well. (3) The only way of accomplishing your desires with this pair is to still go on keeping them in the breeding cage by themselves. It is not unlikely they may bring off a brood yet, and if they do not, then you should keep them apart from the birds in aviary and mate them up separately next year, when they will probably accept the situation and agree to make the best of circumstances.

D. E. R. and Miss Nash.—Answered by post.

TO GIVE COLOUR FEED (Perplexed).—You ought to have given more particulars about the food you are using, as, although you say you are using a ready mixed food, you do not say whose, or what brand it is, and it is not clear whether you mean you are giving the pure colour as bought ready blended, or a mixture of colour and biscuit food. If the former you should not give a teaspoonful of the raw peppers per bird daily The best way would be to mix your egg or biscuit food, whichever you favour, the same as when you are giving plain soft food, then add a large teaspoonful of the colour to each two large tablespoonfuls of the egg food and thoroughly mix it together. This is about the strength to commence with, but when the birds begin to cast their feathers you should gradually increase the proportion of colour to double the above amount, until the birds are beginning to show new plumage on the neck and head, when you will gradually reduce the strength to the same as you began with for the rest of the moult. Of this mixture of egg or biscuit, as the case may be, and colour, you would give a teaspoonful per bird each day. If you make the food palatable, and sprinkle with a pinch of maw seed there will be no necessity at all to remove the usual seed diet during the process of colour-feeding. For more minute details on the subject you should send 3½d. to our Manager for the brochure on "Colour Feeding," which will be sent post free.

CAUSE OF DEATH (Novice, Heywood).—As I am often saying, it is the merest guesswork, and of no practical use to attempt to say what a bird died of from any written description. Only the evidence of a proper post-mortem is of any use. Some inflammatory action in the ovary or oviduct for which the food and general treatment could not be held responsible may quite possibly have been the cause in the case of your bird, but this is merely a hazard, I repeat.

PROPOSED BREEDING QUARTERS (A Puzzled Novice).—(1) If I am right in thinking that the space marked on the wall at right angles to the proposed site of the cages is the window, they would certainly be rather perilously near to the window all the year round, but I see no real objection to the position during the warmer summer months, or until the birds have quite done breeding. But for the moulting season and onwards to the following spring the birds should do better if kept on the wall a little to the left of the door, if the furnishing of the room will allow it. I do not quite approve of your plan of keeping a cage on the top of the wardrobe where there is a space of two feet. It would mean placing the birds far too near the ceiling, and probably in a badly lit and dismal place, for their welfare. (2) If the hen that is due to hatch on the 17th has reared no young previously this season, you may take the risk and let her try again, in case these eggs all prove a failure and she offers to nest again immediately, but not in any other circumstances.

DOUBTS AND HOPES (Crest).—(1) I do not believe there is any cut and dried method which can be applied to all birds indiscriminately as to the time when they should be given no egg food, as birds vary just as much as the opinions of individuals. The opinions expressed in the paper to which you refer can only be taken as those of the individual, just as others are, for what they may be worth. Young birds should be given a fair amount of soft food after weaning up to about two months old, when it should be gradually withdrawn and ultimately a small teaspoonful or so given every second day, until the moult. Thus, it is never really withheld for many hours until quite the end of the first moult. With young birds of varying ages in the same flight or aviary where the egg-food is supplied daily for the benefit of the younger ones the older birds are, of course, indulging even more freely all the time. (2) Yes, I have had eggs hatch out after they had become cold, after being sat upon for one day. It is always best to give them the chance, however unfavourable circumstances may seem. One often meets with great surprises in this branch of aviculture. (3) This question is quite beyond our scope. Whether we shall meet our feathered friends in another world is a question of doctrine rather than aviculture, and far too contentious for us to endeavour to solve. Certainly the great majority of the human race in its vanity has assumed that it held a monopoly in souls, but there has always been, or, anyway, for ages past, a leaven which held in the opposite belief a "most comforting doctrine," as you justly term it.

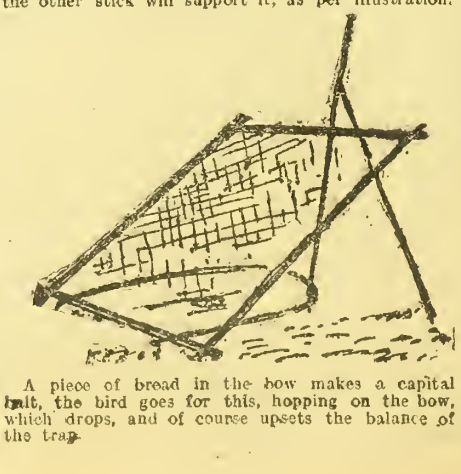
Answered by H. NORMAN.

CHAFFINCH BARE ROUND NECK (E. Linsell).—If you are quite certain your bird has no lice on it, which are frequently the cause of bareness, he requires a change in his diet. Give him an aperient first of salts and syrup of rhubarb; as much salts as will cover a threepenny-piece dissolved in two tablespoonsful of water, to which add three drops of the rhubarb. Give him this for one day to drink and repeat two days later, then add a few drops of fresh lemon juice to the water daily. Make a staple food of the following: Canary and teazle 4 parts of each, rape and linseed one part of each. Offer a few seeds of sunflower daily. Discontinue hemp until he commences to moult, then give a little once a week. Give a mealworm or two every day, varying with small caterpillars, green fly, grubs, ear-wigs, gentles, etc. Offer a little fresh green food daily, and twice a week give a little sprouting radish, turnip, or rape. If you damp any of these they soon begin to germinate at this time of the year, and Chaffinches are particularly partial to this food. He will not be long now before he commences to moult, when the neck feathers will appear again, if not before.

GOLDFINCHES IN AN AVIARY (H. W. G., Kenwick).—You are quite right, the period of incubation is not mentioned in the standard works. The usual time for all the Finches' eggs is about a fortnight, the smaller ones, including the Goldfinch, will hatch in twelve to thirteen days. Feed your birds on the same seeds as they are having now, but on the twelfth day give a spoonful of egg and biscuit, and continue the supply daily. In addition to this, give a constant supply of wild food; gather bunches of seeding grass, chickweed, groundsel, sow-thistle, and many others that are getting their seed pods now. You can also obtain some of the early heads of thistles, these should be just split open with the finger and thumb, and thrown into the aviary. Many of these bunches of wild food will contain insects, and when you are gathering be sure to collect any plants that have green fly on them, the sow-thistle invariably has some, and should be carefully collected. To this could be added a spoonful of soaked rape and teazle, say, every other day. With such food the young should be reared, if the old ones attend to their duties.



BREEDING LINNET MULES (A. T.).—As a rule Linnet Mules are not difficult to breed, but occasionally one gets a Linnet that refuses or apparently refuses to pair; anyway, clear eggs follow. I would not discard a bird that was a failure in his first season, he may be all right next, but these birds are so reasonable in price, that you could perhaps keep a spare one to make certain. You may be mistaken when you say he "took no notice of the hen." I have had fertile eggs from a Linnet when I thought he was quite indifferent to his lady love. Did you keep him well supplied with green food?

TROUBLE WITH BULLFINCHES (H. Bearly).—Your feeding appears to be satisfactory, excepting the supply of green food. I would advise you to discontinue the lettuce, and give seeding grass, chickweed, and shepherd's purse. Mix six drops of syrup of buckthorn in one ounce of water, and give this to drink, for one day only, repeating two days later. What grit are you giving them? It should be sharp sand, ground cuttle fish bone, or oyster shell; this is important, and probably partly the cause of your trouble. As regards your Hawfinch, please read the reply to E. Linsell, in this issue, and treat your bird in much the same manner, that is, give a change of diet and a supply of insects, and green food, not forgetting green peas. You do not give me particulars of your treatment, so I am unable to suggest the actual change required.

BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS

should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2, "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4, "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Birdrooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Moult British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

CATCHING BLACKBIRDS AND THRUSHES (Manx).—I cannot quite agree with you that Blackbirds and Thrushes are difficult to rear; with a little care they are as easy as any birds. Anyway, young birds caught now are quite as satisfactory. A very simple trap for garden use can be made in the following manner: Procure 4 lengths of wood (sticks from the hedgerow answer admirably), fasten them together to form a square frame, which cover with string netting. Next cut a supple length to make a bow, to fasten on one side of the square; two other sticks will be required about two feet long. To set the trap, lay it flat on the ground, raise one side, then insert one of the sticks in the bow and let the edge of the trap down on it; the other stick will support it, as per illustration.

A piece of bread in the bow makes a capital bait, the bird goes for this, hopping on the bow, which drops, and of course upsets the balance of the trap.

WILL NOT MATE (Swallow).—If you possess a double breeding cage with a wire partition you should have placed a bird in each. In time they would no doubt show a friendly interest in each other, and presently the cock would be singing to the hen. If she was ready she would call, when it would be the time to pull the slide; even then they might have a spar, but nothing very serious. These things want managing; perhaps you have a cock Canary in the room, which the hen would like to mate with. You had better run them together night and morning, if only for half an hour, and give the hen a nest pan and plenty of building materials. (2) Size and depth of colour would be your only guide in selecting cock Mules until after the moult. They are very similar when in their nest feather. (3) If you intend to show you will have to colour feed. Procure some food from one of the advertisers and feed your bird according to the directions, mixing it with the soft food, using just a little to commence with, and gradually increasing it to full strength. You cannot get sufficient colour for competition with seeds alone.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING PARROT (H. D. J.).—Letters are a long time in post now. Do not give this bird any more castor oil, but put 5 to 10 drops of cod liver oil emulsion to the daily supply of boiled maize. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Also give it a little honey and borax once or twice daily; spread thinly on biscuit, bread, or plain cake, whichever the bird will take most readily, or failing this method, it can be put into the mouth from the end of a small stick, but only give a little at a time. Giving it by first method is the better if the bird will take it that way. If it appears to need a stimulant, let it have a few sips of very weak brandy and water (warm) once or twice during the day. I am assuming you are dieting the birds on the lines of previous reply. Treat as above for a fortnight and then report progress.

WHAT DOVE? (J. P.).—I think your bird is the common Turtle Dove (Turtur turtur), or it may be a Necklace Dove (T. tigrinus). Your data is insufficient for me to say which. Neither can I state the sex, as the plumage of the sexes in many species of doves are alike, and they can only be picked out by demeanour and infinitesimal differences in size and contour of head and beak, distinctions such as can only be noted by comparison.

YOUNG AFRICAN GREY PARROT (Devon).—You would do well to get our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free from our manager. (1) A Grey Parrot does not need boiled maize, save in the case of a young bird, which has been accustomed to it and is not yet on dry food. (2) Seed mixture, a good one, consists of one quart each white oats, maize, and sunflower seeds, and half a pint each of canary, white millet, hemp, and safflower seeds, and half a pint of shelled monkey nuts, the whole to be well mixed together, ripe fruit and such extras as biscuits, dry crusts, plain cake, raisins, raw carrot; but such messes as tea, coffee or milk sops, table scraps, or animal food of any kind, must not be given. Cuttlebone, grit, and a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon should be continually in the cage. The temperature of any ordinary living-room that is not subjected to sudden changes from one extreme to another, will suit it quite well, but it must not be subjected to draught.

STOPPING BUDGIES EATING THEIR PERCHES (Wandesforde).—I am afraid there is no remedy for this most natural habit. Budgies are Parrakeets, and it is the nature of such birds to peck and nibble at wood, be it perch or the body of cage; moreover, it is healthy exercise for them. I suggest you using natural perches, and to push a fresh one in as soon as one is nibbled through, by so doing and using pieces of branch for the purpose, the Budgies may be content to exercise their mandibles upon the perches and leave the varnish alone. If you are in a town where you cannot cut your own branches, order a bundle of pea sticks from your nearest florist; such will last you months and can be stored in any outhouse, or even out-of-doors, to be drawn upon as required.

A SCREAMING PARROT (Teviot Dale).—I am afraid by the time you see this reply the Parrot may be no more. Most certainly it had either bit its tongue badly or there was internal hemorrhage of some kind. I am of opinion also that it had a fit, and probably in the convulsions bit its tongue and this would account for its screaming. All the items of diet you name are quite in order, and I do not care to suggest guesswork remedies. It is not kind to your bird for me to do so, and it is impossible to form a definite opinion as to what is wrong from the data you are able to give me. The case is rather urgent, and I suggest you taking it to the nearest vet. at once and he will be in a position to diagnose the trouble, which I cannot do in such a case. I have sent you a postcard to this effect.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation he infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2. — By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1½.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2. "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

BOOKS THAT HELP

Both the Novice and the Expert are the "CAGE-BIRDS" BOOKS

They comprise expert advice on everything appertaining to the keeping, feeding, breeding and general management of Canaries, Mules and Hybrids, British and Foreign Birds. Send along at once for those most suited to your requirements.

On all matters relating to the fitting up of the accommodation for your birds you had better consult their construction and furnishing, by H. Norman, and note the best way to house your birds.

Money spent on suitable cages is well spent.

Make them yourself? Certainly, the book shows you how.

Many Photographs and Art Plates as well as Articles.

Cloth Gilt, 2/3 post free. Stiff Paper Cover, 1/8 post free.

Profusely Illustrated.

Wisely fed birds are healthy birds, and healthy birds do you service. Avoid all errors of diet in feeding them, therefore will help you to feed them properly. It is especially valuable at the season when wild foods are to be had in such abundance, merely for the gathering.

There are many sketches and illustrations of all the best known wild plants.

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL.

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVIARIES and CAGES, BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DISEASES & THEIR CURE SEEDS, Etc., and devotes a separate chapter to each individual variety. Get a copy now; it will help you during the breeding season.

The three fine young Canaries here pourtrayed each won 1st prize and special in its own class at the East Ham Young Bird Show. On the left is the ticked Yorkshire which won 1st and special in the Amateur Section for Mr. A. W. Farmer, of Leyton. The Border Canary at the top is owned by Mr. W. Stevens, and won 1st and special in its section, and the other is the Norwich which took 1st and special in the Champion Section for Mr. G. A. Parker.

F. CARL, Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Advertisement Charges.

One Halfpenny for each word up to 48, 1d. per word afterwards. Name and address to be reckoned. Minimum, 12 words 6d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and are charged at two words a penny up to 48 words; after that 1d. per word. No single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Sixpence.

Headlines or Footlines, 9d. 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, 2/6, according to size.

ADVERTISEMENTS UNACCOMPANIED BY CORRECT REMITTANCE WILL NOT BE INSERTED.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

Advertisements must in all cases bear the bona-fide name and address of the advertiser, and no advertisement will be inserted if addressed to a receiving office, or similar place of call.

Advertisements close Tuesdays first post in each week, and should be sent to the Advertisement Manager, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London. Terms for Display Advertisements on application.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

AIDS TO SUCCESS.

Our Books and a Commonsense Application of the Advice therein MUST bring you Profit as well as Pleasure.

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird Rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2. — By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful breeding of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure giving sides of foreign bird keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1½.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2. "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up to date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

Club Reports.

PONTYPOOL C.B.S.

Meeting July 22, Baker's Restaurant, Mr. Lovell chair. Prize money and specials for N.F. Show were distributed. Vote of thanks passed to the donors. Discussion took place on the appropriating of our show date by Aberdare. Sec. stated that he had communicated with Mr. Shelby James, but his letter has not been acknowledged. Decided to adhere to our original show as advertised in CAGE BIRDS, viz., Dec. 7. Also decided to run the show for charity. Sec, was instructed to write well-known judges as to terms. Mr. E. Ashman was appointed to act as Assist. Treas. The question of a brake outing to Abergavenny was adjourned until Sec. hears from fanciers. Prospects of society are extremely good, fanciers turning up strong for weekly ramble.—W. D. Lewis, Sec.

WELSH N. COUNTIES F. & F.A.

Meeting Cartmell's Hotel, Colwyn Bay, July 12. Present: Miss Felton, Mrs. Hughes, Messrs. J. Arundale (chairman), C. Hughes, J. Hughes, T. Barlow, H. M. Prigg, A. Carter, J. Cheshire, G. F. Downing, A. Hinton, J. P. Parry, E. Mostyn, A. Ward, and the Sec. Mr. John Hughes, Llandudno, an old and valued member, was elected to the Committee. Sec. reported that CAGE BIRDS had kindly published a letter from him, appealing on behalf of the Committee for the support of fanciers and clubs in connection with the show; correspondence referring to same was read and commented upon. A long discussion ensued as to the advisability of holding the show under present conditions, and it was agreed that the response to the appeal was very disappointing. After a proposition that an open show be held in November, with an improved but not too extensive classification, it was decided by a large majority that the show for this year be abandoned, and that the balance in hand be held over until circumstances were more favourable for a show.—G. E. Cragg, Hon. Sec.

NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUB.

Well attended meeting, Joiner's Arms Hotel, Bolton, July 22. Resolved that the present officers of the club remain in office during the continuance of the war, or during 1916 in the event of the war being terminated at an early date. That the patronage for 1916 be given to Accrington, Manchester, Ardwick, Sheffield, and Halifax O.S., provided these societies provide suitable classes. That the annual club show oe not held this year. That specials given by the club this season be not for points, but for best birds at each of the abovementioned shows, so that it will not be necessary for members to show at all the five shows in order to win the specials. That £1 per show be allotted out of the club's funds. That Mr. Crawshaw's special, value 15s., for most points gained by an amateur at all the above shows, he accepted with thanks, as also other specials which the committee hope to receive before the show season commences. I should be greatly obliged to hear from any member or friend who has any specials to offer. May I also ask members to let me have their subs. —J. Hopkins, Hon. Sec.

COVENTRY O.S.

Meeting, Dolphin Inn, July 18, a lecture was given by Mr. G. Turrell on colour-feeding, which was greatly enjoyed by all members present, including five new members. At the conclusion a hearty vote of thanks was given to the lecturer.—J. Kent, Hon. Sec.

STANLEY (Victoria) F.F. & C.B.S.

Meeting, July 18; J. Armitage, chair; a good attendance. Proposed to give the best support to Mr. R. Peart, who is running for President of Management Board, and the sec., who is running for committee. Now members, turn up at next meeting and record your vote, as it means a great deal to you having a representative on the Board when your show date comes on. Next meeting, Aug. 5.—R. Hutchinson, Sec.

OPEN NORWICH P.C.

Meeting, July 22, Oddfellows' Hall, Bradford; chair, Mr. Thaberry. New members elected: Messrs. Evans, Crabtree, Snead, and Rolfe. We are still wanting a few more applications for our patronage; dates still open: Nov. 25, Dec. 2, 9, 16, 23, 30, so will societies please let me have their applications on as early as possible. We are giving some good specials and trophies, both in champions and amateurs; Hattersley cup for amateurs, to be won outright in 1916 and 17, and other three specials. Mr. Crawshaw is giving a special to be competed for in amateur classes (a plated teapot). Next meeting, Aug. 12th, Oddfellows' Hall, Bradford.—Sam Wilcock, 16, Back Manor Street, Eccleshill, Bradford.

BEAMISH C.B.S.

Meeting, Bird Inn, July 22, with a good attendance. Decided to add in the schedule for annual show two classes to Norwich section, and four to Yorks; also green or cinn. self or foul cock, also hen classes. New members: R. W. Boyd and G. Hume, Nettlesworth; W. Ward and J. Marron, Chester-le-Street; A. Bales, S. Kendell, J. Briggs, Brandon Colliery; W. Towers, Waldridge Fell; W. Little, Beamish; and J. Louson, South Moor. Some of our members have done fairly well this season; others very poor through the very unfavourable weather. We are increasing in membership, and that looks well for our society, and with a good moult we have every prospect of having a good show on October 21. Mr. J. Hands, Ryton, judges. All fanciers are welcome to join the society.—J. H. Elliot, Sec.

LARKHALL C.B.A.

Meeting Y.M.C.A. Hall, July 8, President in Chair. Decided to have no Young Bird Show this year owing to the unfortunate season which our members have had, only a few having reared a few birds. A motion was tabled for next meeting to discuss the advisability of extending radius limit, as our Nor. cup has been won outright. The following contributed towards a new cup: Mr. A. McLean, 10/-; J. Cuthbertson, 5/-; J. Smith, 2/6; J. Robertson, 2/6. Our President has kindly offered a nice special to take place of Norwich cup this year; same will be on view at next meeting, when members can decide whether we purchase the cup this year or accept special as offered. A motion has also been left till next meeting to discuss the advisability of altering our annual show date. A large turnout of members is earnestly requested to decide above important business.—Thos. J. McGregor, Sec.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill, July 17, Mr. P. Johnston chair, and a good attendance. Balance-sheet was inspected and compared favourably with that of our last young bird show. A feature of the meeting was the nomination of five new members: Messrs. Carnon, Pimm, Pace, Smyth, and Dr. Huggins, to whom we extend a hearty welcome. On conclusion of business, in the absence of Mr. W. Knight (O.H.M.S.), Mr. E. Mourd gave a practical and efficient demonstration in cage making. The cage selected was a Norwich show cage, which, on completion, was awarded to the member guessing the correct number of panel pins used in its making. Mr. Dann proved to be the winner, upon which Mr. Mourd promised him a 2/6 special if he stages a winner in it at our annual show, a very generous offer, which we hope will be won. A hearty vote of thanks closed the meeting.—F. C. Knight.

CAMBRIDGE & COUNTY C.B.A.

Annual N.F. show, July 20, White Ribbon Temperance Hotel. Entries were not up to last year, as many members are with the Colours, but quality was good. Mr. Styles judged Canaries and Mr. Bye Hybrids and British, and gave full satisfaction. A. Manning won special best Nor. with a grand clear yellow of considerable promise, and the Yorks. special went to our Chairman (Mr. Bishop) for a nice upstanding lightly marked buff. Special best Borders, Bryant, with a neat clear yellow, and Mr. Haigh took the remaining Canary special with a big green Crestbred. In the British and Old Mule and Hybrid sections both specials were taken by C. G. Taylor with a Cornish Chough and dark Goldfinch Mule respectively. Novice specials: B. Haigh (Norwich), a clear buff of fair size and good head, and H. W. Taylor (British), neat ben Snow Bunting.

SOUTH SHIELDS C.B.S.

14th annual young show, headquarters, Cyprus Hotel, kindly lent by Mr. T. Pattison; this room is considered by judges to be the finest they have ever seen, well lighted, high, and free from draught. This old society still keeps a prominent place in the cage bird world, and rightly so, when it has the support of such ardent fanciers as W. Thompson, chairman, T. Winter, R. Wemyss, Richardson, Priestley, Tucker, and many others, besides being blessed with having in W. Howden a good staging erector, a member that works like a Trojan at every show. Number was a little below average, but quality was of the best. It was bad luck for Mr. J. Potts to have a very promising youngster arrive at the show dead. Special winners: W. Priesty, best Nor.; W. F. Smith, second best; J. Richardson, son, most entries; J. Dixon, best Bord.; A. Tucker, most points British; J. Foreman, best Nov. The Norwich classes were the feature of the show. J. Riseborough, Sunderland, judged. Nor. Yell.: 1, 2, Priesty; 3, Potts. Buff: 1, Priesty; 2, Smith; 3, Thompson and Pattison. Bord. Yell.: 1, 2, Smith. Buff: 1, 2, 3, Smith. Cinn. Yell.: 1, Richardson. Buff: 1, Smith; 2, Richardson. C.B.: 1, Coppack. Goldf.: 1, Tucker. Greenf.: 1, Tucker.—W. L. Smith.

RICHMOND C.B.S.

Young Bird Show, St. John's Hall, July 10. Entries exceeded last year easily, over 90 birds being on view. There was also great improvement in type and quality, and Mr. Rohson, the judge, gave some very encouraging remarks to members at the close of the show. He specially complimented Mr. Snow on his Hybrid, an evenmarked Goldfinch-Canary. The two handsome diplomas presented by the Society were won by Mr. F. Wilson in Champion and Miss Garland in Novice. The diplomas are eagerly contested for and are greatly prized by the winners. The management was in very competent hands, all members working hard to make the show a success. Special mention should be made of the work done by the Sec., Mr. Colin Brown, and his able assistant, Mr. C. Parmiter. Mr. W. H. Phipps (Chairman) was also a leading light in the arrangements.

Nor., Cl. or Tkd.: 1, c, Wilson; 2, J. W. Phipps; 3, W. H. Phipps; vhc, Carr; hc, Birch. Mkd.: 1, 3, hc, Wilson; 2, c, Phipps; vhc, Birch. LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Second nest feather show, July 15, Bunner's Cafe, Brownlow Hill. 104 birds were staged. Messrs. Abbott and Bratherton judged, and gave every satisfaction. Thanks are due to Messrs. Bunner and Lloyd for the energy they displayed, which no doubt made the show a success. Quite a large number of visitors attended and the officers of the association beg to tender their thanks to Mr. Bray, of Earlstown, and friends who so readily gave their assistance. Special best bird and best Yorks., Hall; best Yorks. Green, Metcalfe; best cl. Nor., Phillips; best Nor. Green, Lowe; best Bord., Bratherton; best Brit. The Shows in Australia.

Balmain and Western Suburbs Norwich and Cinnamon Canary Society.

3rd annual show of the above specialist society was held in the Mechanics' Institute, Rozelle, June 9 and 10. There was a grand turn-out of these popular breeds, over 200 being staged, and the enthusiasm of the members was strongly evidenced by the splendid collection of valuable specials. Messrs. H. T. Adams and H. Douglas carried off between them the lion's share, for Mr. Adams won gold watch, value £11 11s., also several gold medals and case of carvers, and Mr. Douglas the silver cup, value £5 5s., and cruet. Many grand birds were shown, and many fit to win stood cardless, which fact proves the progress which is so strongly in evidence at every show. Mr. J. C. Miller judged.

Canary and Cage Bird Improvement Society of New South Wales.

10th annual show, Newtown Town Hall, May 26, 27. Entries were a record, notwithstanding the fact that some of the Canary sections were a bit weak, the "Cage Bird" section comprising a magnificent collection of native and foreign birds, and these brought the entries above the record. Mr. A. Russell, the genial sec. and his hard-working committee, had everything in order, and an early start was made with the judging. The popular breeds, Norwich, Cinnamons, and Yorkshires, were as fine a lot as we have seen staged in the Colony. There is no doubt concerning the fancy making progress in Australia; type and quality improve with every exhibition. The show was well supported by the public. Judges were: Yorks., R. Condey; Nor., Cinn., Mules and Hyb., A. Thompson; Crest and C.B., J. Curran; remainder, M. H. Taylor.

KEEP ON - - KEEPING ON.

A Story of a Diffident Yorkshire Hen.

By F. C. HENRY, Battersea Park.

BETWEEN six and seven years ago I was employed by a gentleman who had four Yorkshires and one Roller Canary. Finding I was interested in the keeping of cage birds, he asked my opinion as regards the Roller and one of the Yorkshires. The Roller he had bought for a cock, but it had not sung since being in his possession. The Yorkshire he had bought for a hen, and he had tried her with the other three Yorkshires, but she never attempted to build a nest or laid a single egg, although the cocks were in full song.

My employer began to be under the impression it was a cock, and asked me to try and bring it on song, although I had told him it was a hen. The Roller was a cock, but in a soft moult, and I had the two birds under my care for about three months with no result. I was leaving his employment at the time, so, as I could get no song out of either he gave them to me.

Three More Rejected Suitors.

I took them home on the Saturday, and on the Monday called upon Mr. W. H. Vale (Chairman of Clapham C.B.A.) and asked his opinion. He said the Yorkshire was a hen and ought to be soon going to nest. I took her home again and ran her with a Yorkshire-Norwich cross-bred cock, but I had no result from this, so I tried her with a Linnet in full breeding condition. There was still no result, and I then borrowed a Norwich cock from a friend and had another try, but she remained indifferent to him as to the others.

At the end of August Mr. Emms, a member of Clapham C.B.A. sold me a Roller cock, and when I had had him a month I said to my wife, "I am going to find out whether that hen is barren or fertile. I am going to run her in with the Roller, and if he does not send her to nest I will give her away."

Vowing She'd Ne'er Consent, Consented

The second week in October I went home one morning, and, looking up at the cage, exclaimed "Look, that hen has gone to nest." Sure enough, she had used the material I supplied her with, and was sitting in it. The next morning I found an egg there, but it was half as long again as a usual Canary's egg.

She laid three more normal eggs, and sat for ten days. Then, while she was off for a drink, the cock got on the nest and would not leave it for her to go back, and the consequence was the nest got upset and eggs broken on cage bottom; all were fertile. The following season she went to nest three times, and laid six eggs each time. So I have come to the conclusion that one's motto must be "Never despair."

HOW SCOTTISH BIRD LIFE IS CHANGING.

IN a very interesting article entitled "Vanishing Birds and Birds that have Vanished," in the "Scotsman," July 18, Mr. O. H. Mackenzie, of Poolewe, Rosshire, says: "I am so old a man that I can easily look back to the forties in the last century—I was already then a keen observer of birds; and what changes I have seen in the bird life of this wide parish during all those long years! Changes, alas! which are not for the better, but very much for the worse.

"The Night-jar, which regularly bred here in the 'eighties and 'nineties, is also extinct; and the Corncrake is very nearly so, and why, I wonder? Certainly the Corn Bunting, the Black-headed Bunting, and the Twite are not as plentiful as they were formerly; and as to the Wheat-ear, which up till within the last few years was, I should say, the commonest small bird on our moors, there is hardly one to be seen; and no Spotted Flycatchers have turned up at all this year, and we never missed having them before.

"The House Martins have fled from us. When I was young, and up to when I was about 25, the Martins swarmed here. Every house of any size in the village of Poolewe (such as the inn and the church) had Martins' nests closely packed under the eaves, and this was nothing to the countless swarms that bred in the precipice of Tolly Rock, overhanging the deep water of Loch Maree; and so thickly did they flit over the salmon pools of the River Ewe that one could hardly cast a long line without the risk of hitting a Martin.

"Some of the readers of this article may naturally wonder if no new birds have taken the places of those that are going and gone! Well, the new birds are very few and far between, and with one or two exceptions they have no merits that we should desire them, as most of them are uninteresting or harmful.

"Many people will wonder at hearing that the Blackbird has only been here, say, 120 years. On one occasion, in the days of my grandfather, the old gamekeeper rushed in to say that he had seen an extraordinary new bird, something like a Ring Ouzel, without any white patch on its neck, and with a golden instead of a dark bill; that was the first Blackbird here, and he came to stay, and has all but driven out the Ring Ouzel, which I was told was very plentiful in pre-Blackbird days; and he eats ten times as many cherries and bores cavities into apples and pears, ripe and unripe, which the Ring Ouzel never did. The Starling and House Sparrow, of which there were none until comparatively recent times, are both horrid and harmful, and the Bullfinch, which is a new arrival, ruins all the plum bloom in the garden, and the hawthorn bloom in the shrubberies—one year my gardener had to shoot 52 Bullfinches!

"The only nice new birds we have got are one or two very small colonies of Sand Martins, but they do not seem to increase; the Redstart also appeared for a few years, and then vanished."

The Open-Air Method for Canaries.

By E. WILLIAMS, Salisbury.

I HAVE been breeding Yorkshire Canaries for 20 years, and this season have had better results than ever before. This I attribute to the adoption of an open air method of rearing Canaries. Until last October I used always to breed my birds in a spare room, but the room then being wanted by the wife I had to build an outhouse for the accommodation of the birds, which had up to then always been kept indoors. The house which I built was 7ft. long, 5ft. 6in. wide, 5ft. high at the back, and 7ft. high at the front. It was built of ¾in. matchboarding, on 2 by 2 framing.

There is a large window which is open all day, no matter what the weather, and the door also is always kept open. The apertures of window and door are kept covered with wire netting to prevent the escape of the birds, and to keep out cats. The roof is covered with felt, and the whole building cost me about £5. This money I got by selling some of the birds I reared last year in my room. I am never troubled with rats or mice because the floor of the bird room is raised from the ground, and underneath is a shelter for stray cats. These ensure that rats and mice have a very hearty welcome if they attempt to invade the bird room.

Fresh Air as a Asthma Preventive.

When I was keeping my birds indoors they always did fairly well, but I noticed that I was rarely without one or two which were suffering more or less from asthma. This trouble has been entirely removed since the birds have been in the outdoor bird room, with plenty of fresh air.

It was the second week in October before I had the house finished, and the birds then had to come out whether they died or lived, as the room in which they had been kept was required. I had a curious experience with several of the birds fainting straight away, but not one of them seemed to take any harm, and the next day they all were the better for the change.

I feed my birds right through the winter with plain canary food in the hoppers, but I give them a certain amount of mixed seed every day, and always plenty of water for bathing. They are generally in breeding condition by January, and I always pair up by February 14th. I give no egg food whatever until the young hens are hatched, and then very little. I mix four biscuits to one egg, or if the egg is a large one I use five biscuits.

Young Birds in the Snow.

This year I had young Canarics during the first week in March, while there were 10 inches of snow on the ground. From eight hens this year I have reared 53 young, and have finished breeding for the season. Most of the birds were well in the moult by July 6. I might say that this is no exception to my ordinary results, for during the past ten years I have always done about the same; the difference is that my birds seem much healthier through being out of doors.

My breeding cages are more in the nature of large boxes. They are 3ft. 6ins. in length, 3ft. high, and 10ins. deep, divided into four cages by movable partitions which may be taken out to turn the whole large cage into a flight for the winter. Each portion has a loose wire front, and the insides are painted sky blue, the outsides black. The nest pans are of earthenware, fitted with swansdown linings. These are sewn in, not stuck in, so that I am able to reverse them when they get dirty.

When painting my cages I dissolve a little camphor in turpentine, and mix with the paint. If Canary breeders would do this they would be troubled very little with red mite. The perches never touch the back of the cage. I simply push them between the wires and give them half a turn, which fixes them in position, and they are easily taken out for cleaning.

My flight cage, in which I keep 30 birds, is 7ft. long. I very rarely get a non-feeding hen or a sweating hen. I believe both of these troubles are caused through mismanagement through overfeeding or some other mistakes in the treatment. I am a great believer in watercress for the birds, and I like to keep them in high condition all through the winter, for I find with this treatment they come on naturally and early for breeding. In conclusion of these short notes I should like to say that I have taken in CAGE BIRDS every week since its first issue.

Twitterings.

Abertillery Pennies for Soldiers' Parcels.

At a special meeting, held July 22, writes Mr. W. Newell, Hon. Sec., Abertillery C.B.S., we decided to give all our profits from our open show to the Penny Fund held in Abertillery to provide parcels for soldiers at the Front.

Patronage Going Begging.

Kindly "twitter" for us, writes Mr. F. Cole, hon. sec. Southern Norwich Plainhead Club, 51, Melbourne Grove, E. Dulwich, S.E., and let it be known that we shall shortly be allotting our patronage. I have received several applications which show that some clubs are going to try and keep the fancy going, but it is strange what indifference one finds in some quarters.

Societies wishing to have the patronage of the Northern British Mule and Foreign Bird Club, writes Mr. W. Curry, sec., 6, Roxburgh Place, N./T., should apply early, giving particulars of classes, judge, date, etc.; same will be allotted on Aug. 26.

At the special meeting of the Abertillery C.B.S., July 22, Mr. Jos. Parfitt gave an ablo lecture on colour feeding, which was much appreciated by all fanciers present, and the Hon. Sec., Mr. Wm. Newell, has kindly promised to send a copy of the lecture for publication in CAGE BIRDS.

We have received from Messrs. Sandiford samples of their "Royal Red" Feed and Hot Natal Pepper. Both are of excellent colour and should prove satisfactory in use; the "Royal Red" is sweet to the taste and entirely without pungency. The powdered biscuit sold by Messrs. Sandiford as "Honey Crumbs" is very pleasant in taste, and seems just the right medium for administering the colour food.

Fish for One; Fowl for the Other.

Mr. B. Humphries, of the Aviaries, Eastbourne, writes: "As I have put £200 into my business, and have a large stock of birds, and 16 pairs up for breeding, I applied at the local tribunal on July 8 for exemption. They gave me a month to sell out. One of the members of the tribunal was an alderman, who is owner of a large drapery store. This gentleman only three days before applied for exemption for one of his managers, who had already had one exemption of three months, and the tribunal granted him a further three months on the statement that business must be carried on. It reminds one of the old saying, 'Pull up the ladder, Jack, I'm all right.'"

THE PRIZE QUESTION FOR THE WEEK.

THE question for this week is, "What advice and instruction would you give to a beginner in Canary breeding?"

A prize of half-a-guinea is offered for the reply which, in the opinion of the Editor of CAGE BIRDS, is the best sent in.

Answers must be accompanied by a coupon cut from this week's issue, and must reach the office of CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., on Tuesday next, August 1. The coupon appears at the foot of this page, and the Editor's decision must be accepted as final.

This competition is quite distinct from the one in which we are offering six guineas in prizes.

The half-guinea prize for the best expression of opinion as to the Canary Supply Co-operative Association is awarded to Mr. T. Court, 7, McDowall Road, Camberwell, S.E., for his letter headed "Sound Philosophy," and signed "T. C." (see page 414, July 22).

The name of the winner of the prize for the best answer to the question, "What is your favourite Canary, and why?" will be announced next week.

OBITUARY.

It is with feelings of deep regret, writes Mr. Robt. Hutchinson, that I inform you of the great loss that has befallen one of our members, Mr. W. Stephenson, in the loss of his wife. I feel sure that all members and fanciers in Stanley and district will join me in extending their deepest sympathy to Mr. Stephenson and family in their great bereavement.

Death of "Cocky Bennett," the Veteran Australian Sulphur-crested Cockatoo.

A FEW years since we published a picture of the celebrated Cockatoo "Cocky Bennett," of Tom Ugly's Point, Australia. Now Mr. J. Curragh, our representative in Killara, Sydney, sends us the following cutting:—

"'Cocky Bennett,' a Sulphur-Crested Australian Cockatoo, died on Friday in his 120th year at Canterbury. This age is a record in longevity for an Australian Parrot so far as the official records are concerned. For many years this bird was in the possession of Mrs. Sarah Bennett, the licensee of the Sea Breeze Hotel, at Tom Ugly's Point. When she left there, about 12 months ago, she transferred the Parrot to her nephew, Mr. Murdoch Alexander Wagschall, at Woolpack Hotel, Canterbury. The old bird was absolutely featherless for the last 20 years, but it maintained its 'patter' till the day before its death. 'Cocky Bennett' was a great traveller, and is said to have journeyed seven times round the world. Mr. Wagschall has arranged to have the remains of this historic Parrot preserved by a taxidermist."

Mr. Curragh says "Cocky" was a well-known character at Tom Ugly's Point; he had a beak something like Harry Lauder's stick, quite as crooked. It had to have a piece broken off occasionally, or "Cocky" would have been in great difficulties. He had no plumage, but he was for years constantly threatening to fly. He used to flap his stumps of wings and yell, "I'll fly; I'll fly; by God! I'll fly!"

Union is Strength.

Mr. J. Moreland writes that the Falkirk C.B.S., Grangemouth C.B.S., and Bannockburn C.B.S. have combined for the duration of the war, as many members of each society have been called up for service. Among those thus serving their country is Mr. R. Rennie, the hon. sec. of Falkirk C.B.S., and the hon. sec. of the combination is Mr. D. Aitkin, 16, King Street, Reading Muirhead, nr. Falkirk. A meeting will be held at the Oddfellows' Hall, Falkirk, on Aug. 5, to enrol new members and fix date and classification for the annual show.

Six Guineas in Prizes.

IN CAGE BIRDS of July 8 we announced that we should offer prizes amounting to six guineas for articles on birds or bird-keeping. As the competition closes on Tuesday next, August 1, we are reprinting a part of the announcement as originally published.

We invite one and all, whether "fanciers" or "avieulturists" (the terms have their separate meanings, but after all denote one and the same thing, lovers of birds) to let us have for publication for the general benefit their experiences with their pets.

In furtherance of this we offer a first prize of a guinea, and a second prize of half a guinea, for the best and second best article in each of the four sections of bird-keeping, Canaries, British, Mules and Hybrids, and Foreign; eight prizes in all, amounting to £6 6s.

We know that there are many to whom the idea of competing for money prizes does not appeal; they are fortunately so placed that they do not want the money, and they would not care to be associated with a competition. To these favoured ones we would say: mark your contributions "Not for competition," if you so wish, but let us have them, nevertheless. The prizes will be given, someone will benefit by your generosity, and all will benefit by the reading of your experiences.

Others there are who have any amount of practical experience which would be of the utmost value to less experienced bird-keepers if they could know of it, but who are deterred from entering into a competition through a lack of literary ability. We have a word to say to these also. Let us have the information; we will put it into form, even if we have to re-write the whole from start to finish, and it will suffer nothing from your own inability to express yourself in academically correct phrases.

The competition will close on Tuesday, August 1, and the prize-winners will be announced in our issue dated August 13. The Editor's decision as to the prize-winning articles must be accepted as final, and the right to publish any articles sent in, whether prize-winning efforts or not, is vested in CAGE BIRDS. Envelopes should be addressed "The Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.," and should be endorsed "Competition."

A July Songster.

Amid the sudden silence of song birds that saddens the countryside after Midsummer one artist of supreme merit continues to perform during July, says the "Daily Chronicle." This is the Marsh-Warbler, who combines with his own delightful notes unrivalled powers of mimicry. It is mainly by the remarkable song, the colour of the legs, and the eggs that this British mocking-bird can be distinguished from his commonplace cousin, the Reed-Warbler. Practically the Marsh-Warbler was discovered in recent years by Mr. Warde Fowler, a don of Lincoln College, who knows more about the Romans than the Romans knew about themselves, and is also a zealous naturalist.

[All the records given in Witherby's "Handlist of British Birds" of the nesting of the Marsh-Warbler in our country belong to the present century except "Norfolk, possibly once about 1880." and "Warwick, 30 or 40 years ago." It is one of the latest of our song visitors, arriving in late May or early June, and it leaves us at the end of August. —Editor CAGE BIRDS.]

Anyone Seen Jackie?

"Jackie," the pet Raven of the Welsh Regt., disappeared from Cardiff Barracks on Thursday, July 21. "Jackie," who had been brought home by the late Col. C. B. Morland, seems to have got scared by the practice of the military fire brigade. He could say "Hullo" and "Halt" with comical distinctness. Nothing pleased him more than the gift of a shilling (or other bright coin) to play with and hide. He had a penchant for matches, and would carefully collect a scattered boxful and ultimately hide the box.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

I was surprised on opening my copy of CAGE BIRDS to see the portrait of my Chaffinch, writes Mr. John Sykes, Musselburgh. Besides winning first prize at the Glasgow Red Cross Show he has won firsts at the Crystal Palace, Carlisle, Gateshead, City of Glasgow, Bathgate, and other shows. The bird is now deep in the moult, a little earlier than in previous years. During the moult I keep it supplied with soft food mixed with a little colour feed, the same as I give to all my Chaffinches, Brambles, and Hawfinches, besides their usual seed diet. I give them also plenty of wild seed and a few live earwigs, meal-worms, etc. On bright days they always have a bath, but I avoid giving them this on a dull day for fear of a chill. They would bath at any time, and I know that some say that if a bird is inclined for a bath it will take no harm even on a dull day. I have found it otherwise, however, so I do not now seek trouble. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

A CANARY FANCIER'S HONOUR VINDICATED.

A case which is of much importance to fanciers in general has just been decided at Aberdeen. It was alleged by the legal representative of the Aberdeen Amalgamated C.B.S., advocate Mr. J. Munro, that a well-known Aberdeen fancier, Mr. Wm. Allison, had fraudulently won a silver challenge cup with a purchased bird, the competition for the cup being open only to birds bred by the exhibitor.

After a long hearing, the account of which, specially reported for CAGE BIRDS, appeared partly in last week's issue, and is concluded on page 433 this week, the Sheriff assoilzied the defendant with expenses, which is the Scotch way of saying that Mr. Allison is freed from the accusation, and the prosecuting society has to pay the costs of the proceedings. The Sheriff said he was satisfied that the purchased bird had died, as stated by Mr. Allison, and that the bird with which he had won the cup was not the same.

THE CRESTED CANARY.
The Crested Canary is remarkable for the crest or top-knot of feathers, and the rounder and more splendidly feathered the "crest" the more valuable the bird. Crested Canaries have frequently been sold for more than £50 each.

THE SCOTCH FANCY CANARY.
The Scotchman's delight. These birds are not too easily bred or kept.

The Yorkshire after the refining influences of the Belgian and Norwich crosses.

The Yorkshire after a year or two's fostering by the Yorkshire Union.

MY FAVOURITE CANARY; AND WHY

A Selection from the opinions of our readers, as given in competition for our weekly prize.

Song, rather than Beauty.

SIR,—It has always been somewhat of a mystery to me why the Norwich, the Yorkshire, the Crested, or the Lancashire should receive the attention they do from English breeders. The Canary, I take it, is primarily and essentially a song bird. That is the raison d'être of it as a cage bird at all.

But it would seem that as time went on the breeders, in this country at least, lost the original idea, and concerned themselves about "improving" the shape, size, and colour of the bird. So far have they gone in their perverted aims that I am told that in order to improve certain of these features they will even treat a bird in such a manner as to prevent it singing! And this, so that all its vitality might go towards some physical aspect which they endeavour to attain.

So much for the English system of Canary breeding. But it has not been so with the more astute German. He saw, and kept in mind, the one chief factor of the bird as a cage bird. If anything had possibilities of improvement, it was the song, not its shape, or its pose, or its colour. So with every cunning device that he could use, with flute and pipe, and organ, he set about to train and control the wonderful vocal abilities of the bird. The result is what we have in the Roller Canaries. With their slow, restful type of song, they have earned for themselves the sobriquet of "musical boxes."

The ordinary English Canary, with its overpoweringly shrill song, is anything but a songster for the home. It is a "chopper," whose broken and harsh song jars upon the ears of the listener. But with the trained Roller its mellow-toned voice and depth of tone are so restrained that even in the smallest room its song is a delight to listen to.

Now, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred when the average person buys a Canary for his home, does he not want a songster? Whoever heard of a buyer, I mean, of course, the ordinary person, and not the professional fancier, enquire if the bird he was about to purchase was a Yorkshire, or a Norwich, or a Lancashire? No; all that matters to him is whether it can sing, and sing well.

Now I do not think that in that statement I can be contradicted. And yet, why has the breeding and training of the Roller been so neglected in this country? Surely if mere prettiness is the end in view, there are plenty of foreign birds that could be kept.

There is also another good point in the Roller's favour. He will sing quite readily by artificial light. Kept in his shaded box cage during the working hours of the day, so soon as his cage doors are opened, and the gaslight floods his little home, he pours forth a flood of those wonderful tours, the hollow roll, the bass roll, the hollow bell, the bubbling water tour, and the flute notes—each in itself a marvel of vocal effort.

So persistent are they with their song that they have been known to fall dead from their perches whilst singing, the result of a burst blood-vessel in the brain through over-exertion. Not the exertion of the shrill "chopper," but the exertion of the mellow-toned voice of a trained Roller. Mr. J. Tomlinson, the eminent judge of this type of Canary, observes in the current issue of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, that a Roller which came before him "brought for me a new type of the koller-like tour, to wit, a good hollow roll, and while this was being sung there came the slow and restful beat of a bell note, given in the same time as a good set of flutes."

It is for such qualities as these that the Roller Canary deserves far more attention than he gets. In comparison with other types his only drawbacks are admitted to be his small size and insignificant shape and colour. But against these we have his pre-eminent qualities in his extraordinary singing powers, and, after all, these are, as I have already pointed out, the object in view of most cage bird owners. So I plead for the Roller, the singer par excellence, as my favourite Canary.

R. DUGDILL.

SIR,—My favourite Canary is the common little songster who was, before this awful war, imported annually in immense numbers from Germany. My reasons for liking him best is that he is, above all, the companion of the lowly and the poor, the pet bird of children, and of lonely hard-working women. Five shillings, or less, will buy him, and he is a frugal feeder; a hardy bird withal, who can endure draught and smoke, and occasional fasts, due to the absence or forgetfulness of his owner, better than any other bird I know.

Take a walk in the poorer streets of any great city—London, Paris, or Rome; or cast your eyes up to the attics and down to the basements, even in the more fashionable quarters of any town, and you are perfectly certain to see in many, many a window of nursery or kitchen a cheerful little cock Canary whose merry song gladdens the heart of some solitary child or friendless maid-of-all-work.

In face of the facts, it is evident mistake to speak of these small songsters as delicate birds. In reality there is none hardier. In spite of cramped space, smoky atmosphere, short commons (one halfpenny per week is often poor Dick's whole allowance for seed), he will survive for twenty years or more. I knew one such bird who lived in a narrow London lane for twenty-five years, singing to the last.

Though not so brightly coloured as their finer English relatives, these little songsters are lighter and more graceful on the wing, more like our wild Finches, both in their airy movements and in their choice of food. Such an expensive luxury as hard-boiled egg is not for them, but they will thank you with a sweeter song for a bundle of weeds from your garden, or a handful of flowering grass from the park.

(Miss) DYDDGU HAMILTON.

SIR,—My favourite is the Roller. The reason for this is that I am a great admirer of the song of birds, the Canary in particular, and, of course, the Roller far excels in song all other breeds of Canaries.

Another reason for my choice is that in the Roller I have in view, first and foremost, the improvement and perfecting of the song, and, secondly—and this is by no means an unimportant object—the improvement in colour and style of the bird. I claim this second object can be obtained without prejudice to the singing qualities. With these two objects in view I claim to have more scope for genuine all-round improvement in my favourite than can be claimed for other breeds of Canaries.

Yet another point in favour of Rollers is that more improvement can be attained by very careful treatment (quite independent of breeding) than can be achieved in the rearing and keeping of other breeds. I allude to the training of the young for song. I believe that teaching by a first-class tutor has quite as much, if not more, influence on a young bird than its breeding or strain; thus, with only an ordinary-bred youngster, it is quite possible, by using a first-class tutor, to produce a very respectable songster.

From a commercial point of view, I consider the Roller, or, I might say, the Roller with good song, coupled with good colour and style, is the ideal cage bird for the general public, from whom comes the greatest demand. As an exhibition bird pure and simple, the Roller must take a back seat, but apart from this one drawback, I claim the Roller as the most generally interesting Canary to breed and keep, and the best all-round bird to meet the commercial competition of the "hated Hun." HENRY NEVE.

Lovers of the Yorkshire.

SIR,—The Yorkshire is my real favourite because he is the "Gentleman of the Fancy," and it is the gentleman in everything we have to look to to be complete. He is soon on good terms with a lady, and all a fancier requires is to get his better half to help him. He is a made variety, purely the breeder's study. He always looks superior to any other Canary when in either stock or show cage, and no show is complete without him, and you can easily see his good and bad points when in the show cage. Yorkshires are the most prolific breeders, and are much better than any other variety for feeders, as they can easily reach, with that long neck and legs, over the strong youngsters at the front of a nest to feed the others behind. They are very sensible, for after the first time or two of teaching with the stick they never forget how to run in show cages, and they soon make it quite a business to show you their grand position and gracefulness. Last, and by no means least, there is always a fine market for them. J. GIBBONS.

SIR,—In reply to your question, "Which is my favourite Canary?" I would say that I am not an expert upon Canaries, but have for several seasons reared and kept the Yorkshire variety, that being my favourite of the Canary family. I consider the Yorkshire Canary a most handsome bird with his bold, upright, and graceful carriage. He is, at the same time, a fine songster, and I do not think he can be beaten as regards these points.

Perhaps he is a little bit timid among strangers at first, but he will soon make friends and become strongly attached to his master, and will more than repay for his small cost of keeping. I have found Yorkshires the best of parents, rearing their young perfectly, and also prolific breeders.

The young Yorkshires I have found easy to tame. I have one at present eleven weeks old which will take food from my lips and pull my hair; several others I am in hopes of taming in the same way.

The Yorkshire Canary, I think, is a most captivating pet, for his shape and ways are all that can be desired. Given a roomy cage, proper seed, and a bath occasionally (this they enjoy), one should not have any trouble in keeping this beautiful bird. If any reader of CAGE BIRDS will try keeping Yorkshires for a hobby, he will never regret trying the experiment, as I have found, with proper care and treatment, this variety is one of the most interesting of our feathered pets. For the reasons given, the Yorkshire Canary is my favourite bird. W. KNIGHTLEY.

A Vote for the "Wee Gems."

SIR,—Having decided, after some little experience with common Canaries, to procure and breed something better, I visited one of the good shows in Yorkshire to see what exhibits would suit my taste. Knowing that the Crested Norwich was called the king of the Canary tribe, I went half in love with them beforehand.

I therefore viewed Crests very carefully, then the Norwich Plainheads, passing on to the Yorkshires, admiring each in turn, and finally turned to the Border section.

After the long feathered Crest, the bull-necked Plainhead, and the tall and stately Yorkshire, the "Wee Gem" seemed to me the very essence of all that was sweet and beautiful in the Canary world. These at once took my fancy, and after again going through all the classes, British and Foreign included, I decided that a pair of the "Wee Gems" was necessary to my complete happiness.

I arranged to purchase a good pair from a breeder across the border whose birds were little pictures, and he sent down a sweetly pretty pair, with which I was successful in breeding some lovely youngsters which are perfectly delightful to see and a great joy to possess. I have no hesitation in stating that my favourite was and still is the "Border."

He is alert, vivacious, dainty, prolific, the very essence of vigour and life, and, above all, charmingly sociable. He is one of the smartest birds bred to-day, and for lightness and silkiness of feather he may be equalled, but certainly not excelled.

Moreover, it is decreed that the Border shall not be colour fed, and should be judged for carriage, type, and quality of feather. Thus these birds are bred and shown (or should be) just as nature made and coloured them, without the aid of any artificial food for colouring, which is, to my mind, "as it should be."

The colour feeding question is one with which I have no quarrel; the Norwich and Yorkshire look very fine when well coloured, but the "Wee Gem" is par excellence without it, and I should be extremely sorry to see it used on them. Let the Norwich and Yorkshire breed and colour their birds, and the best of luck to them all, but give me the Border, the "Wee bonnie Border."

A. J. WORRALL.

Norwich for Colour, Quality and Shape.

SIR,—To my mind there is nothing to compete with the Norwich Plainhead. You wish to know why, and I have had the same question asked me by many friends interested in our feathered pets. I consider the Norwich is the most typical Canary we possess. It is such a lovely, robust, and well-made bird that it takes the eye at most of our shows, therefore it has my vote wherever it appears.

The ideal Norwich, to my mind, should be a bird of colour, quality, and shape; size and carriage are also of great importance. The head should be bold and neatly moulded, of good entrance, no flatness wanted here, nicely arched, with a clear eye, and free from any browiness or loose feathers, as in our Crest-bred. I might say here that nothing is worse than a puny head on a standard sized body. The neck should be short and thick, with a broad, deep, and the chest nicely rounded, as we see in our Bullfinch, and the bird should be well filled-in down the back, showing nothing of shoulders. Wings short, of a compactness in harmony with the body, and meeting only at the tips; no overlapping as we often see. The tail nicely carried, not too long, and well packed. Legs short, and well set back, showing a little thigh. If the legs are long and too forward, to my mind the bird has a stilty appearance. It should possess a nice, easy-going style, and stand well across the perch, no crouching, as we sometimes see. I also like to see a certain amount of briskness, and the feathers to have a nice soft and silky texture; there must be no coarseness about them. A Norwich must be short and compactly made, and I consider birds of good quality are generally also good coloured. A. M. GRAHAM.

SIR,—From my earliest recollection birds have been well represented in my existence. What with Dad's Jackdaws, Mother's Larks, and my brothers (there were seven of us) all favouring different species, we were never without a very interesting collection. In late years, when I got a home of my own together, I began to think it was time I had some more birds. I went to a good bird show (I believe it was the first show I had ever seen). The splendid specimens that I saw staged there opened my eyes properly. I wandered round and round looking at the various birds, and couldn't make up my mind which was the finest one there until I came across the Norwich section, and that finished me at once. Never had I seen such birds for colour, shape, or size, and I decided then and there that Norwich was to be my section in future. Since that day I have never been without a good Norwich, and although I have now about five different species, the old fancy is still the favourite. The only reason that I can give is because I cannot help it. I really think if I were drawing my old age pension, and somebody offered me a good pair of Norwich cheap, I should have to invest part of the proceeds in the purchase.

W. H. PYKE.

SIR,—The Norwich Plainhead is my favourite Canary. My first reason is that, being a working man, I want my hobby to be self-supporting, and I know of no variety that can beat the Norwich Plainhead for this purpose. There is no more robust and prolific Canary, and a first-class specimen, with his noble bearing, active gait, well fitting jacket, and beautiful colour is a thing of beauty, and the admiration of everyone, fancier or not. They breed more freely than most varieties, show committees provide better classification for them, and, partially through this, the Norwich Plainhead has become the most popular variety in the Canary world. High-class birds that can win even in novice classes command a high price; the surplus, too, fetch a better price than other kinds as household pets. They are not subject to disease, especially that dreaded complaint blindness, so much as some other varieties. A Norwich Canary will make himself at home either in the mansion or the outhouse, and I am sure that anyone wishing to take up Canaries as a hobby cannot do better than start with a good pair of Norwich Plainheads, which I am sure will soon prove their right to be considered favourites, as have mine. J. BASTOCK.

Canary Supply Co-operative Association.

An Important Decision. Many Applicants for Secretaryship.

The Committee met at CAGE BIRDS' Offices on Monday, July 24. Present: Messrs. H. J. Fulljames (Cage Birds' League), in the chair, J. C. Birch (Queen's Park C.B.A.), H. W. Gutierrez (British Roller C.C.), H. J. Kybert (East Ham C.B.S.), J. Jeffrey (Metropolitan C.B.A.), and W. H. Vale (Clapham C.B.A.).

Practically the whole of the business consisted in the consideration of the many applications for the position of Organising Secretary. In the end thirty letters were laid aside, the applicants for one or another reason not being considered suitable, and a number selected for further consideration. The Chairman was requested to communicate with the writers of the latter asking for an interview at the next committee meeting.

A letter was also read from an applicant for the post of Depot Manager, and the Chairman was asked to inform the writer that the post was not on offer until after the Association had been fully organised.

First Come, First Served.

An important proposition was moved by Mr. Kybert, seconded by Mr. Jeffrey, and carried unanimously, to the effect that the first 250 shares in the Association should be issued at 5s. discount. Applicants for the first 250 shares, therefore, will have to pay only 15s., namely, 5s. on application and the balance of 10s. in two or more instalments as may be hereafter called up; such shares to rank on an equality with the later £1 shares, and to bear full interest and bonus benefits.

The consideration of details of the scheme of co-operation was deferred to the next meeting, July 31, and it was agreed that this meeting commence at 7.

A letter from Mr. G. S. Packer, under the heading "Co-operative Canary Breeding," is published in our correspondence columns, and this, as well as others, will receive the attention of the committee in due course. There is just one point in the letter, however, to which we may here refer, in case a similar misunderstanding may exist in the minds of others. Mr. Packer says that the price that will be offered by the association is 5s. per bird, on the average. In the scheme as outlined by Mr. Usher, and which is, we repeat, only a tentative one, the figure of 5s. was mentioned as a "safe estimate" of the average. Mr. Usher says very distinctly, "high class birds would fetch pounds, and the average would probably work out considerably higher."

There are two ways of putting a scheme before the public. One way is to underestimate expenses and overestimate receipts, and the other way is to estimate expenses at the extreme and the receipts at the minimum. The former method is immensely more alluring, but Mr. Usher has very rightly chosen the latter method, and there can be no reasonable doubt that the expenses will not reach the estimated amount, and that the receipts will exceed the minimum quoted.

Seventy-two Young in a Bad Season.

SIR,—It may be of interest for you to know that during this season, with the valuable assistance I receive from your weekly paper, CAGE BIRDS, I am rearing 72 young birds (Yorkshires and Cinnamons). These are all fine and healthy. At present I hold three cups, though a few years since I should not have thought this possible. If one keeps in touch with the many ideas suggested in CAGE BIRDS there is no reason why quality of birds should not be had, and quantity also may come to the keen fancier. HY. CRAVEN.

Abandonment of Llandudno Show.

SIR,—It will be seen by the report of our last committee meeting that owing to circumstances arising out of the war, the above show has had to be abandoned for this year.

On behalf of my committee, I desire to take this opportunity of thanking all those fanciers who, in response to our appeal, so kindly offered their support, which will be borne in mind when arrangements for the next show are being made.

Allow me to thank you for your courtesy in placing your columns at my disposal.

White Robins in Ireland.

An Irish Way of Putting It.

SIR,—The enclosed was sent to me from Ireland; the place mentioned is in County Wexford. I may add I saw a White Sparrow with a black-bib this year:—

"Whole white birds are to be seen near the residence of Mr. M. Breen, D.C., Mandoran. The birds number four and are believed to be Robins, about the same size, and have exactly the same chirps. Some children in the locality say that they were hatched in a Robin's nest, and that those birds are new comers, while older people state they saw them about the same place forty years ago."

The Elusive Chaffinch-Canary Mule.

Has Anyone Ever Got Fertile Eggs?

SIR,—Even negative results are sometimes not without their value. This spring, aspiring to breed the above hitherto unaccomplished cross, I procured four strong singing cock Chaffies, three of which were steady, and gave them as mates three very nice Norwich hens born last year, and a larger Norwich hen which had previously bred with a Twite. The result is altogether disappointing, as everyone of the fifty eggs laid has proved to be clear. No doubt among your very numerous readers there are many who have tried their hand at this cross. I wonder if any of them have got so far as to secure fertile eggs, or even eggs showing any sign of fertility?

A Bird that Would Not Go Away.

SIR,—I note with interest Mr. W. S. Harper's letter under this heading. The bird mentioned is quite an ordinary specimen of the Tree Sparrow (Fringilla Montana). At the recent show of the Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S. the bird was open to inspection at my invitation, and it was quite a disappointment to those present to identify the supposed Greenfinch-Sparrow as a Tree Sparrow. Among other well-known exhibitors and experts, Mr. W. Shakespeare, one of the oldest of birdy men, named it on sight. Tree Sparrows are rather uncommon in London, but in severe wintry weather a few can usually be found in Sclater Street, E., probably to the consternation of the vendors, who invent all manner of names for them, the favourite perhaps being "Hill Bunting." They are valued at ninepence or so, according to the appearance of the buyer. The latter part of the letter, re its apparent tameness, is astonishing, as Tree Sparrows are absolutely untameable; the only steady one I have seen was in a case—stuffed. F. C. KNIGHT.

The Song of the Virginian Cardinal.

SIR,—I write to correct a trifling clerical error that appeared in my contribution re Virginian Cardinals which appeared in your issue of July 15, due no doubt, to my somewhat illegible writing.

On page 398, column 3, last word of line 4, "chirping" should read "churring." As a matter of fact, "Chirping" does not at all convey the noise I mean, which is a kind of Chur-r-r-r-r—just exactly similar to that made by Java Sparrows quarrelling.

I would also like to correct a mistake I made in ascribing song No. IV., commencing "Who-are-you," etc., to a Virginian Cardinal. At the time I thought the matter was beyond any possible doubt, for although I had not actually seen the bird singing this stanza, the aviary from which the song issued contains no other bird, so I believed, capable of producing any sound remotely resembling the one described.

Careful observation since then, however, has made it quite certain that the singer is not the cock Cardinal, and I don't think it possible that it can come from the old hen, as she is now well in the moult.

The sound appears to come from amidst the grass, and, though it seems almost incredible to me, I now begin to incline to the opinion that it must issue from one of a pair of Common Quail inhabiting the same aviary.

If this, indeed, proves to be the case, the Quail has incontestable claims to be considered a musical songster, though I admit I have never heard of any such claim being made before on behalf of these birds. Perhaps some of your readers who have kept Quail could throw some light on the subject. As soon as I have definitely identified the songster I will let you know.

Hybrid Breeding Made Easy(?)

Sir,—I have heard a lot about Hybrid breeding, and how uncertain it is, but I think the following way would not be so bad. First you have a large outside bird house somewhere about 10ft. long, 6ft. high, and 5ft. wide, and a nice lot of birds in it, including all the British finches; Linnets and Goldfinches, and so on. Also a number of Canaries, cocks and hens. All these are flying loose for the first round of eggs from the Canary hens, and then for the second round you cage up the Canary cocks by themselves in single cages in the same room. When they are all singing (the cocks, I mean) they will bring the Canary hens on, and then the British finches have their opportunity. Watch for the eggs that will be laid, and you have a few clutches ready for hatching hybrids. Don't you think we could get any number of hybrids in this way? I would just like to hear some opinions.

Wake Up, Newcastle C.B.S.

Sir,—I see Mr. Crawhall has met the secretary of Newcastle C.B.S., who is in a distressed state owing to the condition of the club; but what is the cause, and why have only nine members paid their annual subscription? I hope Mr. Crawhall's appeal will not be in vain, but I am afraid it will, because the majority of last year's members say they do not mean to pay unless the society is reconstructed. We should try to encourage and help matters and be sociable one to another, and until this is adopted, and other matters put right, I am confident that Newcastle C.B.S. is finished, so the sooner we make a start the better. Now, present and past members, put your shoulder to the wheel, and make Newcastle Society second to none as in former years; but try a meeting on a Saturday night, so as to give everyone a chance to attend. Anxious.

Co-operative Canary Breeding.

A Pessimistic View.

Sir,—It is a puzzle to me who will deal with this association in the manner suggested. Take my own case, which must be like hundreds of your readers. I bought my first stock for breeding from a well-known cup winner who advertised in Cage Birds, and I sell many of my own young stock by the same means, and to those who know me, my average for cocks and hens being about 12s. 6d. each (cocks 20s., hens 5s.), which is a very different average from 5s. offered by the association. It would be out of the question my dealing with them, and so will say many of your readers.

Up to the present I should say all breeders have been able to dispose of their young birds to the dealers who live in their neighbourhood or through advertising in your paper, or through their friends, and that they get better terms than those mentioned by the association.

To produce the vast numbers that appear to be required, and sell at the price mentioned, it appears to me one would have to go in for colony breeding on a very large scale to make a business of it. To take it up as a hobby and breed in small cages one could never do it without selling the article produced at something like 50 per cent. less than it had cost, that is if they sell at 5s. average. To my mind, the association would want an agent in different centres to go round, bargain, and buy the entire young stock out and out (cheque from the association), the agent having his own packing cages and clearing the stock away.

Take my own case again, which must be like so many. This year I have about 50 young ones, of which I want to sell about 40. I expect to dispose of them by advertising in Cage Birds and through my friends. In the suggested idea the agent could call, he would see the class of birds, all rung, hear them sing, and by clearing out the lot at one sale we might come to terms. But I should never think of sending the lot to London to get just what might be offered, or fetch what they sold them for

The above arrangement would save the breeder a lot of trouble, all going at one deal, and to the agent on the spot. Of course, a bird expert would know from headquarters the demand of the market, and purchase the class of bird required, both low and high-priced birds.

It appears to me there would be friction by sending birds to London in large numbers, and not bought out and out before being sent. One would be interested to know, after the association had bought all these thousands of birds, to whom they are going to sell them.

In Quest of a Brother.

Sir,—On reading through Cage Birds I notice in its pages the name of a wounded soldier, Lce.-Cpl. Cleverly, at Salisbury; it is on page 383, July 8 issue, and is in connection with the wounded soldiers' scheme. I may say that I think it is my brother, and if so I should like to communicate with him. I have a brother in the Army, but do not know where he is. The only thing I know he is wounded, and I think he joined a Glo'ster Regiment. Of course, he may not be my brother, but, anyhow, I am pleased he is a lover of birds, and, being a fancier myself, I feel deeply interested, and should be more so if he happened to be my brother; then it would be double praise for your valuable paper, Cage Birds, which was the means of me finding him. I may say that my wife sends me Cage Birds every week from home, for my last orders when I left to join the Army, 18 months ago, were, "Don't forget to send me Cage Birds." My full address is Corpl. Song Birds Under Fire.

Sir,—A letter received by us from a British soldier and bird fancier in France, which we think would be of interest to the readers of Cage Birds, is as follows:—

"I will now try and tell you a little about the bird life out here, and what I have seen and heard. The Larks are quite as good as our own from a singing point of view, and it is simply splendid to hear them when we are in the trenches. What is more remarkable is to hear several Larks singing in the air and at the same time shells bursting all round at the airmen, but it does not stop the Larks. The finest bit of music I have heard out here was the song of a Thrush. It came and sat on an iron chimney in front of the billet where I am now staying, and sang for quite an hour, and it has been seen and heard there several times since. It was really the best Thrush I have ever heard. The place around here is thick with Chaffinches, and it is nothing unusual to have two or three singing at once along the fire trench near by, but they have not a good finish to their song from a Chaffinch singer's point, though I have seen some good specimens for the show bench. I have seen birds of all kinds here, but I was surprised when I found the House Martins in the cowsheds and stables; there are dozens of nests on the ceilings, and, of course, anyone can have a good view without interrupting them. I shall be able to tell you all about them when I come home." Spratt's Patent, Ltd.

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

Sir,—Mr. Gordon Stewart's letter referring to Sub Rosa's article under the above heading made me wonder what I had been thinking about to miss an article on a subject in which I am so much interested. I thought I had read my Cage Birds from cover to cover, but upon reference to your issue of July 8 found the article which had escaped my attention.

I am at one with your correspondent in many of his assertions; but why say that there is less chance of keeping up size through inbreeding? If other things can be fixed in a strain by its use, why not size also? If you can fix good heads in your birds by the judicious mating of related stock, why not also fix size? I know it is affirmed by some that the mating of relatives tends to diminish the size of the progeny, but if your correspondent will do me the honour to read the extract from the late Mr. Comyns' book which I gave in my lecture before the Northern Border Club, he will find that a breeder of pigeons found after 10 years' inbreeding from two pairs of birds he had better, and in some cases larger, birds than the originals. The conclusion I have come to, so far as my own experience of inbreeding goes, is that for the first one or two generations—which is as far as I have gone at present—there is no diminution of size.

This season, from a father and daughter mating, I have two youngsters larger than either parent even in the nest feather, so that when moulted they should be very much bigger birds than their parents. From the only other pair of this relationship I have unfortunately no youngsters. This may or may not be the result of close relationship, but I rather think it is because the cock is getting old and past his breeding time.

The point that "Sub Rosa" emphasises, that inbreeding should only be carried on with exhibition stock, does not necessarily mean that other relationship than father and daughter may not be used. I know many fanciers who will not breed nearer than cousins; these may not necessarily be exhibition specimens. We must recognise that there are near and remote relations, yet, so long as there is relationship at all in the birds mated up, there is a degree of inbreeding even if it is only 32nd or 64th cousins. I have known men spend more than £25 or £30 on exhibition stock, and have very few show birds from them, and I have known others spend as many shillings and at their first attempt breed birds that they foolishly have sold for as many pounds as they gave shillings for their parents, hoping that they could breed as good the next season, but it never came off.

To the man who breeds one good bird I say keep it, pair it back to its parent, and the following season pair it to its progeny. If a cock, run with two or even three daughters, for it is not always the best progeny that breed the best. I will give you an instance brought to my notice last year. One of the best yellow Yorkshire hens bred in this North-East part of England last year was bred from father and daughter mating, but it was from the worst daughter. From the better daughter only average stuff was obtained.

Since you published my article I have had a conversation with a fancier who was interested in Aberdeen Angus cattle; he told me that a prominent exhibitor bred most of his winners from this mating of father and daughter. Another gentleman told me of an instance of inbreeding with poultry, where, after twelve years' inbreeding, they suddenly reverted to the jungle fowl type. Unfortunately, he could not give the particulars of the type of fowl or the methods employed, but it ought to act as a warning not to indulge too freely, but to watch every step with extreme care. If any of your readers have any data or experience to relate they would render exhibitors a service if they would send them to you for publication T. C. Crawhall.

[We commend the last sentence of Mr. Crawhall's admirable letter to the notice of our readers. Knowledge disseminated becomes of value to all, and ultimately those who first gave of their knowledge benefit by the experience of others. Many doctrines that are carefully nursed by those who selfishly keep them to themselves are based upon limited personal experience, and their worth or worthlessness is only proved after years of work. If they are subjected to a wider test than is possible to any individual person, their merits or demerits become more quickly proved, and proved beyond doubt, so that what is in the beginning more or less of a belief soon becomes an established fact if there is anything in it, or soon becomes discarded if it is proved to be without sound foundation. This can only be to the universal benefit, and may save years of wasted effort. —Ed. Cage Birds.]

Profitable Canary Breeding.

A Celebrated Breeder of Yorkshire Canaries Plumps for the Breeding Cage System.

Sir,—Well! what about this colony system of breeding Canaries? To my mind it is much like other questions. Much can be said both for and against the system; it has its adherents, and its followers are no doubt guided by the principles of the method being most suitable to their individual circumstances. Long years of experience have already taught fanciers that there are divers roads which lead to success; it is the results of these various ways which our Editor wants us to give for the benefit of our fellow fanciers, and thus give a helping hand, no matter how small, in the "great push" to capture the German Canary trade.

The question—What shall I do to be on the right track? no doubt involves the fate of every person about to take up the hobby of Canary breeding, and rational persons will not rest satisfied until they have a clear understanding on the matter.

Franklin is accredited with having told the world that "God helps them that help themselves," and I know of no instance wherein this axiom is more clearly demonstrated than in the breeding of Canaries. It is to the assiduous, plodding, hard-working fancier that the fruits of his labours will come.

I am in no wise desirous of throwing a "wet rag" on the aspirations of persons about to take up the hobby of Canary culture, for I know of no time in the history of Canary breeding when such a golden opportunity presented itself to the uninitiated. They have the strong arm of Cage Birds to lean upon, with a very willing Editor to render all assistance possible, a rising market for their surplus stock at considerably advanced prices compared with past years, and an unlimited demand for high-class stock at remunerative prices, all things which the old-time fanciers would fain have enjoyed.

I have had something like thirty years of Canary breeding in its progression, but have no elaborate knowledge of the colony system of breeding. Formerly I was possessed of two large flights, each 26 ft. long, 4 ft. 6 ins. high, by 4 ft. 6 ins. wide. In these I bred with four hens and one cock in each flight, with only normal results. The advantages so far as regarded [illegible], feeding, and number of cocks required, were acceptable, but the disadvantages in respect of quarrel some bouts were too numerous for my liking, hens fighting for one and the same nest, both laying in the same nest, and at times both sitting on the same nest, heads and tails.

There were occasions where one hen happened to be sitting and the others not, and as soon as the sitting hen left her nest for a feed one of the other hens would immediately go on to the eggs, and this procedure would invariably result in a violently contentious bout before the intruder could be ejected.

At other times I found two or more nests of youngsters about to take the sticks at one and the same time, and this baffled me in keeping a strict account as to how each inmate of the flight was bred. However, such a strict account is not needed if one is simply breeding common birds for the market, and even if a strict account was needed it could better be carried out by the ringing process than was the case in bygone days.

Over twenty years have elapsed since I discarded this system of breeding in numbers, preferring breeding in single cages, varying in size from 14 by 14 ins. to 3 ft. 6 ins. by 2 ft. 6 ins. and 19 ins. from back to front. This latter cage has served me well; in such a cage I place one cock with two hens, making provision for two nests at each end, thereby taking measures for each hen to have a spare nest in case they should come on nesting again before the young have already left their nest.

Last season I brought eleven fine youngsters from the first round in one particular cage from mother and daughter, the latter of which had been bred in the very same cage the season previous. Among the above-named youngsters there was one particular bird, a clear pink-eyed yellow cock, which stood 2nd at Skelmanthorpe in the cup class for unflighted Yorks. the first time out, afterwards adding several 1sts to his account, and finally passing into the hands of a Nottingham fancier for the sum of £6.

This season I again placed in this large cage a couple of hens, along with a suitable partner, which, by the way, I let remain there during the season. However, my little troubles began (things which are never to seek); they would insist on sharing the same nest, do what I may, so, thinks I, out you come and in goes another trio. Then all went on plain sailing, both hens going down to sit on the very same day, and bringing forth nine fine chicks, one of which has since gone the way of all flesh, leaving me with eight for round one, not a bad start. One, a year old eye ticked yellow hen, is again sitting on five good eggs, which are due to hatch on July 16, whilst its stable companion, a big, fine, hot coloured young yellow hen, I had to remove on account of its refusal to go to nest again, and because of its interference with the other hen, which by this time had again laid a clutch of five eggs which she was about to incubate.

So much for the big cage and its occupants, but my interests have long been centred in the system of breeding in single cages, which are roomy, measuring 26 by 19 by 11 ins. I have a stack of such uniform cages, sixteen in number, which have been in use for over twenty years, and are in better condition for breeding purposes than on the very day I got them new. I usually give these cages two very thin coats before putting up for breeding, one of best white paint, and finishing off with a coat of Todd's best white bath enamel for inside only, thus making them as smooth as glass, and rendering them red mite proof, so to speak, for I have not seen such a thing in my room for years.

I find the system of single breeders most adaptable to my requirements; it has a great many good points to recommend its use, some of which I will enumerate. The first of these is that a strict ancestral line of descent can be kept, this being a very important matter for those about to become engaged in the pursuit of breeding high-class stock: in fact, I consider it an indispensable procedure, for a fancier that does not know the lineage of his stock is simply like a ship without a rudder. Haphazard breeding wastes you hours of precious time, and brings you numberless keen disappointments.

Next item is, you can more suitably pair up your stock, you can reserve one particular cock for your favourite hen, or if you be wishful you can comfortably run one cock with six hens, providing you have sufficient time at your disposal, just as you could in the colony system of breeding. Furthermore, if you should have a cock bird contract that obnoxious habit of egg eating, he is more readily detected in the single breeder than would be the case under the colony system.

Some hens refuse to brood without their partner, whilst on the other hand some turn very spiteful when about to incubate; these numerous little troubles I find more readily adjusted under the system of breeding in cages than would be the case if the colony system was applied, therefore personally I plump for the single breeder in preference to the colony system. NOTES FROM AN OLD DIARY.

By T. H. KINCH.

I FIRST bought a Canary for a cock, and, of course, I was "had"—it turned out to be a hen. I grieved over it for a time, but it turned out to be a good breeder and feeder.

I hand-reared some Redstarts, Nightingales, and Blackcaps, and raised by these means enough to buy a Canary, which cost me a very large sum, 7s. 6d. Many a day did I go and listen to this bird singing, quite unknown to the owner. It was a stormer, and came from Norwich, so I suppose you could call it a Norwich bird.

I bred from two nests of birds. This was the start, and I consider I was lucky. How many times I examined this pair during the year to see if they had the "pip" I could not say. That was the only disease I was acquainted with. How I dread to think of my foolishness in pricking the oil glands of the birds for the pip, when no pip existed, only in my foolish and unenlightened brain, but by accident light dawned upon me. A stranger explained to me that it was Nature's medicine chest, and this caused me to think. I can say that from that day to this I have never done so cruel an action, and have stopped many others doing the cruel trick. Such is ignorance.

Owls and Hawks in a Loft.

I have caught in the daytime quite a number of Owls. These I kept in the loft over the stables, but was caught in the act, and had at once to release them. I have taken two kinds of Owls from one tree, also Sparrow and Kestrel Hawks. For many years I have hand-reared nests of Bullfinches and Goldfinches, and generally a nest of Linnets.

As I refer to my diary, so does it refresh my memory, once I had a nest of eggs given me from a pair of Yorkshires, the hen dying. These I placed under some Linnets in the garden, and after they got to about eight days of age, I hand-reared them, and brought up three—two I kept, and one I returned to the giver. I have done the same since on several occasions, with good results.

In practising this experiment, you must make sure the eggs are in safety, and not likely to be taken. I chose the Linnets' nests because they were the safest, and not likely to be disturbed.

A Pig-sty as an Aviary.

An old pigsty made of bricks I netted with fish netting, and make into quite an artistic aviary, planting in it all kinds of trees and shrubs in old pails and pots, nests of various kinds I placed in these to get my birds to breed.

I tried the Hedge Sparrow to breed with a Robin, and cock Yellowhammer with a hen Chaffinch, and another kind of Buntry. These, of course, turned out failures.

The Grey and Yellow Wagtail I had, and tried to pair, but they refused. Three kinds of Tits I had there at one time, but one by one I lost them, owing to their getting through the double netting. I was not at all sorry, for they took up much of my time in searching for their natural food.

I once kept an Ox-eye Tit for five years in a cage, and it proved a great pet; at last I killed it by giving it flies from a fly-paper. A nest of Redstarts I raised at this time, and gave them to Dr. Bradburn at the time when he was compiling his noted work, and many a letter have we written comparing notes. I advocated hemp seed for fresh-caught birds, which I believe he at last also strongly advocated.

I believe that Bullfinches and Goldfinches have always held the greatest hold on my love. Many and many a nest have I hand-reared of these, and many a pet has been made, and many a tale could I unfold respecting the Bullfinch. Many a dozen have caught in trap cages during the winter and spring, when they have been after the fruit buds; I knew if I did not catch them in that way they would have been shot, for the damage they do to the gooseberry and plum buds is considerable.

But yet, on the other hand, the owners of these trees would let the fruit stay upon the trees until it either rotted or fell off, and yet would not allow one of the most beautiful of our British birds a feed. Some are never happy unless they are destroying life, especially those who possess a gun. I have laughed many a time to see a would-be sportsman stalking a sitting bird in a tree, and seen his delight if successful. The trap cage was a home-made one, and I have caught dozens of birds in this way, using a Goldfinch and Bullfinch as coy birds, and baiting the trap with hemp seed.

Through the Cage Bottom.

Once I caught a fine Nut-hatch, which I kept for over three years; it then got away through knocking in the cage bottom. The bird gave me no end of pleasure. It was amusing to see it hide its food in the crevices at the back of its cage; not that it ever wanted for food, but I suppose only from habit or nature.

At large, I believe they do store their food for future use, but why, when in a cage and well fed, I could not understand. This bird would take food from my fingers, and then go straight away and hide it.

What a lesson can be learnt from Nature if one will only study it. After I grew up an accident, through a fork being stuck into my knee-joint, caused me to be unable to get about without crutches, so for amusement and to pass the time away I was always on the look-out for something to amuse myself, and many a lesson have I learnt from the wild birds, which have been my hobby from boyhood.

I can now say that if I had not had them to occupy my mind I cannot imagine what I should have done. Read I could not when in pain, neither could I stay indoors if fine. If I could only get out then I found plenty to relieve my pain and cause me excitement, especially in the spring, by watching the birds building their nests, laying their eggs, and rearing their young. I carefully noted all these for further reference, recorded the first nests and eggs each year, also the arrival and departure of our spring and autumn visitors.

Many a time have I passed a joke with our shepherd, who was one of the old school (in fact, he is alive now, and over 80 years of age), by saying I had heard the Cuckoo in January or February if the weather was mild; but he always capped me by saying he had heard it a week ago.

A Senseless Practice.

This man, to my knowledge, has cut some dozens of birds' tongues to make them talk, but I do think that I was the means of stopping this cruel practice by speaking to the police about it, and they cautioned him. This firmness frightened him, but severed our friendship.

Now I am on this subject I may say that he used to use a piece of silver (as he said), but I quite believe it was a piece of tin, and cut under the tongue. At first I know he used a pair of scissors and cut the point of the tongue off.

A Jackdaw was once brought to me nearly dead by two of the daughters of a lord, who asked me to save it. They said the tongue had been cut, and I asked them by whom. They said the butler, who understood birds (well, he did, in his way, for he had a pair of Canaries for about a twelvemonth). I told them that I should like to serve him the same.

The Coloration of Eggs.

Quite one of the curios in my experience was a white egg in a Hedge-sparrow's nest—four blue eggs and one white. Now there is a problem to think out. I have thought this over many a time, but as yet cannot solve it. I was not able to learn if that egg was laid first or last.

This is not the only instance I have noticed in wild birds' eggs. I have often thought that possibly—but, of course, cannot prove it—that such an egg would turn out an Albino. The young I was not able to see, as the nest got destroyed.

Some years ago I found in my garden a Hedge Sparrow's nest with four eggs. One of these was most peculiar. This egg had spots on it. I saw the young raised, and feeding in my garden, one turned out to be a cinnamon—quite a rara avis, this bird. I pointed it out to several friends, who tried to catch it for me. Now, did that peculiarly-marked egg bring forth that cinnamon Hedge Sparrow? I must say that I could not solve the question. I sometimes think it might be so

Are these Albino's produced from natural-coloured eggs? If not, there is still a problem to be solved respecting the natural markings on the various eggs. Inbreeding may be the cause, which I think is more than possible in these unusual markings and unnatural eggs.

I am sorry that I have not as yet been able to solve the question to my satisfaction, and I am quite afraid that I shall not be able now, as my health will not allow me; but I still should like some naturalist to take this up and settle the question.

I am quite sure that the cock bird does have some influence over the markings of the eggs, i.e., judging from my experience by Canaries' eggs; one cock would cause the markings on some eggs to be quite different to others; then, when I reversed the cocks, they became quite natural. I do find that I have much to learn yet over the egg markings, but I am still giving it my closest study.

Canaries' eggs vary very much in marking, but does a heavy marked egg produce a heavy marked bird, or a slightly marked egg a clear or ticked bird? Several times have I marked eggs to test this problem, but cannot as yet speak positively. This article is only dealing with wild birds. The Canaries I will leave for the present.

In this district (Ramsey) I have neither noticed nor heard of any good specimens of the Albino. The cinnamon Hedge Sparrow I saw myself, and can vouch for it. I have heard this year of a black-and-white Blackbird. These are the only two instances which I have heard of in over 20 years. There may have been more; if so I did not hear of them. But I daresay I should have done, or my friend, who is a naturalist, would have had some knowledge of them, for everyone takes rarities to him, and I then see them.

This friend had a collection of 20 little Owls at one time, and it was he who identified them, and has done all he could since he found them out to preserve them. Many a boy he has bought them from, giving a few pence for them, and then liberating them.

Cannot bird life—its modes, ways, and usefulness—be introduced into schools, and taught the young? Many a useful lesson could be taught, if only to promote kindness and check cruelty. It would be far better than some of the lessons now taught.

Thanks to some of our large manufacturing firms, pictures of birds, etc., are now hung up in the schools. This is a step in the right direction, for there is nothing like making a good impression on the young. Many a coloured plate of birds have I given to boys interested in birds, and many a time have I named the eggs for them, and assisted them to study bird life.

My Black-cheeked Lovebirds.

By F. GOODWIN (London, S.E.)

THESE beautiful hardy little birds with their acrobatic ways and gollywog eyes (which give them a cunning appearance), are very attractive as pet birds, and although somewhat a shy species they have been bred by many aviculturists, so you see so far as Lovebirds are concerned they are really the ideal. Unfortunately, the sexes are very difficult to tell, as you will see later by my experience. Appearance is very little to go by, as my birds not only differed in shape but also in disposition; how they deceived me I shall never forget.

Bad for the Lilac Bushes.

I received my Black-cheeks over two years ago, and well I knew it. I had been congratulating myself upon the condition of some very nice lilac bushes which were doing well in the aviary, which contained some Parrakeets, a condition which very seldom exists. As the weather became settled I turned the new-comers into the aviary and dreamed of young Black-cheeks. The first thing they did was to challenge all the other birds to fight until they found some Redrump Parrakeets that had youngsters too much for them, and then they went for those lilac bushes like bulldogs in a rage. Every leaf was bitten off in a very short time; still not contented, they started on the small branches, and finished my bushes for ever.

Having made all the litter that was possible, they started entering every hole they could find until they decided to get married and keep home in earnest, clearing all the pieces up in the aviary and filling up a nest-box to the top. But it was all a fraud; they deserted this nest and started with another box. Mating seemed to take place many times a day, and I really thought fertile eggs would make their appearance; but they were only playing at it.

At a time when success seemed at hand the one that had been playing the part of a good husband got between the door and canvas that opened into the open. My wife went to give fresh water, and not noticing the position of the bird opened the door and away he went over the tops of shops and across the Old Kent Road. My wife brought the sad news down to my works, and of course I said good-bye to it, but home I went and put a cage over the aviary with a string attached to the door, and inside a nice spray of millet.

The Return of the Wanderer.

The day passed without a sign of the truant, but next day towards evening a well-known clear note was heard from the house-top, the Black-cheek in the aviary began answering, and down the free one came, and a great amount of fuss took place. Soon he made for that millet, and the door was pulled to pretty quickly I can assure you. What this bird had managed to find to keep him alive for two days is a mystery to me, as there are very few gardens around.

Now, if only a judge could have seen it he would have given it first prize. Talk about depth of colour; it was all there right to the skin, and I should think he had been down all the chimney pots in the neighbourhood. I returned him to the aviary next morning, but his adventures had seemed to upset things, and no eggs were laid for that season.

Next season into the aviary they went again, but they dissolved partnership straight away, and started building in different nest-boxes. As I missed them one morning, I thought things were strange, so I had a look at the nest-boxes, and there was an egg in each one. I could not believe my own eyes, after what had taken place the year before; so early on the next alternate morning I caught up the bird which had previously persuaded me it was a cock, and waited events. It was not long before an egg was presented to me. The way this bird had deceived me in playing the part of a good husband as it did is not likely to be forgotten.

As both birds were now laying, I did not wish to part with either, so I advertised for a "certain" cock. I got no offers of cocks, only people wanting to buy my hen, so I sold the deceiver, as I thought if this bird got away again and reached London she might give me a call; but up to the present she has not done so.

An Embarrassment of Riches.

A few weeks passed, and again I advertised. Then it rained cock birds, for I was offered no less than five and I secured one, but the season had worn on and I had very little hopes of a nest. Into the aviary he went, however, but he took no notice of the hen, but she meant having another nest and laid three very nice white eggs and sat like a broody hen, but it was useless as the eggs were, of course, unfertile. The bitter cold nights were now here, so I caught my birds up for the winter, as my aviary is not suitable for winter accommodation.

I believe in giving my birds all the exercise I can, so during the winter I give them a fly around the room about twice a week, and it is very amusing to see them go round looking to see what mischief can be done. When Black-cheeked Lovebirds are flying around, however, it is as well to beware of your picture cords and frames, otherwise you may get into serious trouble with the wife, but to see them pop their heads over from behind the top of a picture is another picture in itself; they are acrobats indeed.

Obedient, though Mischievous.

I have trained my birds to go into their cages when I wish; not only these birds, but other Parrakeets as well. Bird-keepers who wish to give their birds this treat must be very careful for some time or they may have trouble. Only one bird must be liberated at a time, otherwise they will dash about anywhere. As soon as one bird has got used to flying about in the room his mate will generally follow. Precaution must, of course, be taken to cover any fires or mirrors, and the windows by the drawing of the curtains.

Black-cheeked Lovebirds have been bred in large cages, and can stand any amount of cold weather, so long as they have a good dry shelter, and a husk to sleep in. The food is Canary seed and white millet, and for a change spray millet, also plenty of grass seed through the summer, the diet being so simple that no one should be deterred from keeping such highly amusing little creatures.

ABERDEEN FANCIERS AT LAW.

SPECIALLY REPORTED FOR "CAGE BIRDS."

A cup and a rose bowl were given at the show as special prizes, and as far as I remember I awarded the cup to the cock and the rose bowl to the hen. Mr. Allison won both trophies. I remember hearing that the birds that won these trophies were brother and sister. From the appearance of the two birds that won the trophies I formed the opinion that they were very closely related. They were both first-class birds. In selecting the winners, what I go upon as a judge is, first, the type or shape of the bird, then the quality, and the feathers. We give points for the head, tail, body, and size, and then balance them all up. But it is type and quality which counts first. Colour counts for nothing; it is just a matter of opinion. Type means the shape of a bird. You get all shapes amongst Norwich. I was a judge at the Aberdeen show on a previous occasion some years before, but I have been judging at shows for the last dozen years and have seen birds of all classes. I know that for several years Mr. Allison has been an exhibitor at various shows throughout Scotland, and that he has been a successful exhibitor. I know that of my own knowledge. The birds that Mr. Allison has exhibited are of a very high quality. I could not say how many birds he exhibited at the Aberdeen show last year. Q.: Would you say the birds generally exhibited by Mr. Allison at the Aberdeen show were superior to the birds shown by any other man in Aberdeen? A.: Yes, I would say that; but you hardly require to ask that question, as the birds won, and that means that they were the best.

Re-examined: In judging Norwich Canaries, colour is left out altogether. I do not say it goes for nothing; but it counts for very little. It is type and quality that counts; colour is a matter of opinion.

By the Commissioner: Four birds were put before me for the cup, and the whole of them belonged to the defender. There were more than four entries, but they remained after the "weeding out."

Alexander Thomson, stonecutter, 27, Stafford Street, Aberdeen, examined by Mr. Munro, said he was not a member of the Aberdeen Amalgamated C.B.S., and had no interest in the Society. He was a breeder of Canaries, and had been a breeder close on 40 years. On 9th June he saw a bird in Mr. Aitken's office. Q.: Had you ever seen that bird before? A.: Yes. I had seen it in the Ball Room of the Music Hall at the Aberdeen bird show. Q.: Did you take any particular notice of it? A.: Yes, because it was a particularly good bird, the best I had ever seen. I made a good examination of it. I mentioned this particular bird as an outstanding bird to Mr. Strachan, Mr. Sandieson, and a few more. I next saw the bird at the Bon-Accord show on 1st January. I was a judge there myself. I recognised the bird at once as the bird I saw on 18th December. It took the first prize. I saw the bird next in Mr. Aitken's office. Q.: Is there any doubt in your mind that it was the same bird? A.: None; it was the same bird. Q.: What particular points were there about this bird to single it out? A.: The particular points were its head and neck. It was very strong in that. Q.: What about the size? A.: It is a great size for a young bird. Q.: Anything about its feather and colour? A.: It had the best colour ever I saw. Q.: Have you seen any birds equal to it in your 40 years' experience? A.: No, I never saw one I liked so well.

The Sheriff—Q.: Is this the bird in court? A.: That is it. That is not his natural colour. His colour has faded; that is when they are casting their feathers, or moulting.

Re-examined: I think it is the highest-coloured young bird ever I saw. In the matter of colour it is an outstanding bird. There was nothing like it for colour in the show. Q.: Do you know Mr. Allison's birds? A.: I have just seen them in the show. Q.: Had he anything in the show from which he could have bred that bird for colour? A.: The colour is artificially put on. Q.: Aberdeen fanciers cannot put on that colour? A.: No. Q.: And if they do they have not done it in your 40 years' experience? A.: No. Q.: Was it much superior to anything else Mr. Allison had in the show? A.: Oh, much.

Cross-examined: I have exhibited birds at south shows, but not this last year. I exhibited at the Crystal Palace about 22 years ago. Q.: Within the last few years has the quality of the birds exhibited at the Aberdeen shows depreciated very much generally? A.: They have depreciated a little. Q.: How long has Mr. Allison been exhibiting at shows in Aberdeen? A.: Seven or eight years. I know he also competes at the big shows in the south. He was a pretty successful exhibitor. He won this cup at the same show in Aberdeen for two years. Q.: You have told us that the colouring of the bird is artificially produced? A.: Yes. Q.: And you apparently suggest that people in Aberdeen are so far behind the people in the south that they cannot do it? A.: They cannot do it so well as the people in the south. Q.: Does it not occur to you that Mr. Allison, having been a competitor in the south, must necessarily have acquired the skill to produce the colouring? A.: I do not know. I have had more experience than Mr. Allison, and have not succeeded. There is not one of them in Aberdeen can do it. Q.: How many birds had Mr. Allison forward at the show on 18th December? A.: I could not say exactly. I did not count his exhibits. He had a good many forward, and he was very successful. Q.: So successful indeed that he gained the cup and rose bowl, and his birds were the only ones qualified to compete? A.: It was his birds that won them. Q.: He had birds in the classes eligible to compete for the cup and rose bowl? A.: I do not know whether they were eligible or not. Q.: And therefore the competition for the cup and rose bowl was confined to Mr. Allison? A.: Yes, I believe so.

The Sheriff: You say that bird is unmistakable? A.: Yes, unmistakable. I could pick him out among a thousand. I don't believe there is another like him in Scotland.

John Strachan, joiner, 34, Rosemount Place, examined by Mr. Munro: I am not a member of the Society, and have no interest in this bird whatever. I have been a fancier for about 30 to 35 years. Q.: Is that the bird you saw in Mr. Aitken's office? A.: Yes. Q.: Is there any possibility of a man of your experience mistaking that bird? A.: No one could mistake that bird. Q.: When did you first see it. A.: In the bird show in the Music Hall on 18th December. The bird attracted my attention. There was not a young bird like it in the show. It is many years since a young bird like that was bred in Aberdeen. Q.: Was the bird spoken about among the fanciers as an outstanding bird? A.: Yes, as something rare in this part of the country. I next saw the bird in the Bon-Accord show on New Year's Day. Q.: Did you recognise it at once? A.: Yes, without any doubt whatever. Q.: Was it recognised as the bird that had been exhibited on 18th December? A.: Yes. Q.: When did you see it next? A.: In Mr. Aitken's office. Q.: You had no doubt about the bird? A.: No. There was nothing approaching the bird. The bird is particularly good in the head and neck. All over he is particularly good, but he has a weakness in being inclined to carry his wing a little high. No one ever coloured a bird like it in Aberdeen. I have no doubt at all that it is the same bird.

Cross-examined—Q.: I think in recent years the quality of the birds exhibited in Aberdeen has not been up to the former high standard? A.: Nothing like it. Q.: Surely you do not go so far as to suggest that it is impossible for anyone in Aberdeen to breed as good a bird? A.: I would not say they could not do it if they had the material. Q.: Did you notice whether that bird crosses its wings? A.: It does not cross its wings. There is just one fault with the wing, and I have mentioned it.

Re-examined: There is a peculiarity in the wing in respect that the bird carries it a little high.

By the Sheriff—Q.: You say this is an exceptional bird? A.: He is a really good bird. Q.: You have not seen such a fine bird in Aberdeen? A.: Not bred in Aberdeen. Q.: Have you ever seen the defender's stock? A.: Only in the show.

James Sandison, mason, 629, Great Northern Road, deposed: I am a member of the Aberdeen Amalgamated C.B.S., and have been a fancier for about 30 years. I could not say I have seen that bird in court before to my recollection. I did not see it in Mr. Aitken's office. Q.: Is there anything exceptional about that bird? A.: Not particularly. I do not think that is the bird that was at the show. This bird might have been at the show, but I did not take any special notice of it. Q.: Did you have any conversation with Mr. Allison about the birds at the Aberdeen show? A.: Yes, I met him one day in the station and asked him if he had bred that bird, as there was a rumour that he had bought it. He denied it. I said I did not believe he had bred it, and he said: "All right. I don't care what you believe." Q.: Was there anything peculiar about the bird that took the prize? A.: Yes. He had a bad wing carriage. Q.: Is that a good size of a bird? A.: Yes. A fair size. He has an exceptionally good head. Q.: Is it an exceptionally good type of a bird? A.: Not particular.

Cross-examined: Birds are washed before being exhibited. Q.: If you were washing a bird would you be bound to notice any markings upon it. A.: Yes.

By the Sheriff: I saw this bird at the show. Q.: Did you doubt whether it had been bred in Aberdeen? A.: Not at the time. Q.: But you came to doubt it? A.: Yes, and said so to the defender. Q.: Was it Mr. Hector who suggested the doubt in your mind? A.: No, it was not Mr. Hector. Q.: Is that the bird or not? A.: No, I do not think that is the bird at all. Q.: Why not? A.: It was far superior to this bird. The bird that was exhibited was a finer specimen than this one. Q.: Are you sure about this from your experience? A.: Yes. Q.: Do you think the bird produced could be bred in Aberdeen? A.: Oh, yes. Q.: But you do not think the one that gained the cup could be bred in Aberdeen? A.: No, it was too good a bird. There is not the stock in Aberdeen to breed a bird like it. This is an inferior bird to it.

Robert J. Robertson, compositor, 4, Hosefield Road: I am secretary of the Amalgamated Cage Bird Society, and produce the schedule for competition. At page 19, No. 3, there is offered "A handsome silver challenge cup for the best young Norwich bred by a member, in classes 9 to 13 inclusive (confined to 8 miles radius)." Mr. Allison had taken the prize twice before, and if he took it a third time it became his own. I do not remember the bird particularly. I was too busy with my other duties.

Cross-examined: The rules of competition are given at the beginning of the book. Rule XI. says: "Any member or exhibitor having objections to any bird as not being eligible for competition, according to Rules 6 and 7, must lodge the same in writing with the Secretary, stating the grounds of protest, before the birds leave the exhibition; and in all cases where an objection is made the objector must lodge 2s. 6d." Q.: Did any person lodge a protest prior to the exhibits being removed, against any of Mr. Allison's birds. A.: No.

John Hector, president of the Aberdeen Amalgamated Cage Bird Society.—I have been a fancier for about 20 years. The bird in court is the same as the bird that was exhibited at the show in December, but he is in somewhat poorer condition. Q.: With your experience, is there any mistake? A.: No, I do not think I ever saw a head on a young bird equal to that one, but I must say he looked better, because he was staged for the occasion and washed immediately before. Q.: What are the outstanding points about that bird? A.: His head, I would say, and he is a big size. In brilliancy and depth of colour, he stood out from all the others in the show. Q.: Have you seen anything like it in Aberdeen? A.: No, not bred in Aberdeen. Q.: And you are not prepared to believe that the bird that took the prize was bred in Aberdeen? A.: No, I would not say it was bred in Aberdeen. Q.: What about its wing? A.: I did not take particular notice of it. Q.: Some question arose about the right of Mr. Allison to the cup? A.: There was a very strong feeling amongst the fanciers in Aberdeen in connection with the bird, and owing to the dissatisfaction the society took action. I had no ill-will against Mr. Allison. I never was on bad terms with him. Q.: Anything you did, you did as president of the society? A.: Certainly. I got several letters and there was a meeting of the society called for 3rd March. Previous to going to the meeting I called upon Mr. Allison, and asked him if he would come, and he said "No." I said to him I have some letters in my pocket that prove that you did not breed this bird, and it is not right you should do this sort of thing to working men in the society. He said, "Let me see them," and I said, "I cannot show them," but I said, "I am going to bring up this matter to-night, and my reason for calling is to see if we can settle it before bringing it up. You know you did not breed the bird." I waited for an answer. "No," he said, "I won't say that I bred the bird, and I won't say I didn't; all I say is that I showed the bird according to the rules of your society." I pressed the matter, and he said he did not care, he had made about £60 by selling birds this year, and was prepared to fight it. Previous to this there was a fancier in Aberdeen who knew he bought the bird for £15. Q.: Had anything been said about fighting before he mentioned it? A.: No, certainly not.

By the Sheriff: I said we did not want to fight it as it was unseemly, especially at the present time, and that he must first go into the matter calmly and get the matter settled. He said: "I have nothing more to say in the matter." Q.: What you wanted him to own up to was that you believed he had committed a fraud on the society. A.: To say either that he bred the bird, or did not breed it. Q.: The result was that you left him without getting any definite answer? A.: None whatever. Mr. Allinson attended a meeting on the 31st March, and I said, "Have you come to make a statement," and he said, "I'm afraid not." I said, "I'm sorry for that. You know you did not breed the bird." He then said, "The bird was bred at Cults, and you have the wrong end of the stick." The meeting went on with the business, and this matter was taken up last, and Mr. Allison was asked to leave, but he refused to do so. At last, when he saw he had not the meeting with him, he rose and left the room. Even then I followed him and said, "Cannot we settle this matter," and he said, "No, you will find yourselves in the wrong box; the bird was bred at Cults."

Cross-examination.—Q.: He declined to give any further information until the letters were shown him; he wanted to know what foundation there was for such a charge? A.: We declined to show the letters.

The Sheriff.—Q.: Your position is that you considered this was a fraud from the beginning? A.: Yes. Q.: And you still hold that opinion? A.: I still hold that opinion. Q.: You thought you had sufficient evidence that this bird had not been bred by defender, but had been bought? A.: Yes. Q.: And that is the view you are maintaining now? A.: Yes.

This closed the evidence for the pursuers.

William Allison, The Brae, Cults, defender.—I am a bird fancier, and attend all the shows both in England and Scotland, and buy the very best birds I can get. I have taken an interest in birds all my days, and by visiting the shows have become conversant with the best classes of birds produced. The highest price I ever paid for birds was to Mr. Lawson, Carlisle, when I purchased a yellow cock for £15. I also bought from Mr. Lawson a buff variegated cock for £4. I have been exhibiting regularly at the society's show in Aberdeen for eight or nine years. I have always been fairly successful, some years better than others. I have devoted special attention to colour. It is internal treatment. At the time I was at the Carlisle show I met Mr. Lawson and fancied one of his birds, which I purchased for £15. The birds arrived in Aberdeen on November 19, and at Cults station at 9 o'clock in the morning. I entered six specimens for the Cowdenbeath show, the entries for which closed on 15th November, four days before these two birds came from Carlisle. I despatched the case of birds to the Cowdenbeath show on the afternoon of the 19th. The birds that arrived from Carlisle were very soft and out of condition. They were not in a condition to be shown at Cowdenbeath. The bird in court was hatched on June 6. It was the first nest of the pair that year. It was bred from a buff cock and a yellow hen. This hen was shown at Glasgow as a cock and was 1st. The bird was sent to Cowdenbeath show and was 1st in the open class there. The second time it was shown was at the Aberdeen show on 18th December, and it was 1st there. I showed ten birds altogether. Q.: Had you any birds forward bred from the same pair as this one was bred from? A.: Yes, I had the first young yellow hen. Q.: So that it was a full sister of this one? A.: Yes, but a later nest. Q.: How many birds do you keep altogether? A.: At the end of the year about 60 or 70. The Carlisle bird which he bought for £15 improved and seemed to be getting on all right, and was kept in the kitchen. It took suddenly ill, however, and died on the first Tuesday of the New Year. I buried it in the garden. All the members of the household knew about this. I was a bit down in the mouth about it myself. It was Mr. Hector himself that first saw the bird at Carlisle, and he having told me about it I looked out for it. I would not have known anything about it unless he told me. At the interview with Mr. Hector I said I showed the bird according to the rules of the competition. The schedule distinctly says that the bird must be bred by the exhibitor within an eight miles radius of Aberdeen, and my answer to that was that I accepted the conditions. He said, "What become of the Carlisle bird?" and I said, "The Carlisle bird has nothing whatever to do with the matter, and I have nothing more to say." I lost my temper, because it was a slap at me, and I did not like it. I declined to meet the committee until they had shown me the letters which they alleged justified the charge they made against me. I adhered to that position and declined to meet them until I knew what they were accusing me of. Q.: Have you any observations to make as to the class of birds shown at Aberdeen for the past few years? A.: For myself, it is rarely I buy birds in Aberdeen. I go further afield to buy specimens. Q.: The result of your efforts in that direction is that you are able to stage the best birds shown in Aberdeen? A.: Yes. Q.: And you repudiate the suggestion that you win prizes by buying a bird from another man? A.: I would not do it.

Cross-examination.—Q.: Is there anything special about that bird in court? A.: It is a good bird. I have seen a better. Q.: Was the bird you bought from Mr. Lawson very outstanding? A.: It was a bigger bird than that. It was an unflighted bird.

It was the best bird I ever had. Q.: I suppose no one could mistake Mr. Lawson's bird for this one? A.: In his opinion, he might think it was the bird he sold to me. He could be mistaken because he had no opportunity of comparing both birds. Q.: Is the bird in court as good a bird? A.: No, it is smaller. Q.: You say there is nothing special about its colour? A.: It is a good coloured bird. There is nothing about its wing to attract attention. Q.: Did you ever show Mr. Lawson's bird anywhere? A.: I did not. Q.: Why? A.: Because the bird was soft and ill. Q.: When did you first get to know there was a suspicion about the bird? A.: Mr. Hector intimated to me in March that he had letters in his possession saying that the bird exhibited at the Aberdeen show was not correctly bred. When I bought the bird from Mr. Lawson I made no bargain with him at all. I sent him on the cheque and did not say I did not wish the transaction spoken about because it was a big price.

Re-examined.—Q.: Is there a mark upon that bird in court? A.: There is. Q.: Where. A.: On the left thigh. Q.: You heard Mr. Lawson say he washed the bird and he had never observed any mark upon it? A.: Yes, he said so. At the time the bird was shown the mark was larger than it is now, and he must have seen it. Q.: That proves to demonstration that it is not his bird? A.: Yes

The Sheriff.—Q.: Can you show the mark? A.: Yes.

Defender took the bird from the cage and showed the mark to the Sheriff.

The Sheriff: Is Mr. Lawson a skilled man in birds? A.: Yes, I should say he is. Q.: Then it comes to this that he says the bird in court is the bird he sold to you, and you say that it is not? A.: Yes. Q.: Does it not strike you as an extraordinary way of repudiating a charge to say, "I won't say I bred it, and I won't say I did not?" A.: It might have been better to have said it was a lie. Q.: That would have impressed me. To the plain man your answer suggests that you thought there might be some loophole you could get through? A.: I did not look at it in that light. Q.: That is the way I look at it, and it was a strange, and, to me, crooked answer to a straight question.

Mr. Aitken: He wanted to know who was bringing the charge against him.

Peter Walker, stationmaster, Cults, said two birds came to Mr. Allison at Cults at 9.4 on the morning of 19th November, from Carlisle.

Mr. W. Allison, senr., said the bird in court was hatched in the first week of June last. It was shown at Cowdenbeath and Aberdeen shows. There was a mark on it by which it could be identified, on the left thigh. He remembered his son purchasing two birds at Carlisle, and they arrived at Cults on 19th November. They were both sold, and not as a condition to be shown. The two birds from Carlisle were kept in the kitchen, and he took them up to the birdroom next morning. The Carlisle bird was never shown at all because it was ill. It died on the first Tuesday of the New Year, and was buried in the garden. It was about a month ill. It was slightly bigger, and slightly deeper in the chest than the bird in court.

The Sheriff: Q.: There is no doubt about it that the Carlisle bird is under the sod, and that this bird in court is not the same one? A.: I am perfectly certain about it.

Mrs. Allison and Miss Allison corroborated

Alexander G. Forrest, solicitor, Perth, said he had exhibited Norwich Canaries for the past ten years. The season for exhibiting was usually from the beginning of October until the end of December. He usually visited most of the principal shows. The defender, Mr. Allison, and was a very successful exhibitor. Witness was at the Cowdenbeath show in November last year, and noticed Mr. Allison's exhibits. There was a cup for the best Norwich Canary in the show, and Mr. Allison won that cup with a variegated cock. He had a yellow cock there as well, but it was beaten by his variegated one. Q.: In your experience of breeding birds, assuming you had bred a Canary and parted with it in the month of November, and did not see it again until it was in the moulting season, would you be able to identify it? A.: No, certainly not I would not undertake to do so. Q.: Do you think it is possible to do it? A.: Not with any degree of certainty, because the bird might have undergone quite a change. In the height of the breeding and moulting season the bird is all drawn out of shape. Q.: I understand that fanciers usually wash the birds before showing? A.: Yes. Q.: In washing, would you be bound to observe if there was any distinctive marks upon the bird? A.: Undoubtedly. Q.: You examined this bird, which is now before the court? A.: Yes. Q.: Did you find a mark upon that bird? A.: Yes, there is a small mark on the left thigh. Q.: Would the owner of that bird be bound to have noticed that mark in washing the bird? A.: He would be bound to see it. Q.: And I take it that if the owner of the bird had washed it and saw no mark, it follows that that is not the bird he washed? A.: That is so. Q.: You saw this bird at the Cowdenbeath show? A.: Yes. I did not see it at the Aberdeen show. Q.: Speaking generally of the defender's birds, have you found them very good specimens? A.: Yes, they can hold their own with any in Scotland. He breeds exceptionally good birds. Q.: Did you see what was pointed out to you as the parents of this bird? A.: Yes. It is quite like a bird from these parents. When I heard this bird was off these parents I was not at all surprised. It has quite the characteristics of the parents. Q.: Has Mr. Allison been very successful in breeding with the colour of his birds? A.: Yes. This bird was bred from a yellow hen, and was so highly coloured that it was shown as a cock. I remember him purchasing the mother of this bird in Glasgow some years ago. It was eventually discovered to be a hen.

Cross-examined: I have been in the Fancy for about ten years. Q.: Is there anything outstanding about that bird in court? A.: It is a good all-round specimen. I have not been at the Aberdeen shows. I know that very few of the Aberdeen fanciers exhibit at the larger shows. Their class is not very high. Q.: You would be surprised to learn that the man who bred that bird and parted company with it for six months was able to identify it? A.: No, I think he has made a mistake. Q.: Is there anything peculiar about the wing carriage of this bird? A.: I think the wing carriage is quite good. Q.: Is there anything abnormal? A.: No, I do not see it. There is no trace of the wings crossing.

Edward Barron, Glasgow, said he had been a breeder of Norwich Canaries and had acted as judge at various shows. He knew Mr. Allison, who was practically the only Aberdeen exhibitor at the south shows. He was one of the most successful exhibitors in Scotland. His birds were of a very high standard. Q.: I understand a point is made to get the colour as high as possible? A.: Yes, that is a point of the Norwich. Q.: How is that result reached? A.: There are many ways. Colour feeding is one of them. Q.: And has Mr. Lawson been very successful in that? A.: Yes, they have good colour. According to the catalogue, I do not think anybody else could have won the cup. Colour may be a point, but it is really the shape of the bird. I have seen this bird in Mr. Lawson's house. Q.: Did you find any mark upon it? A.: Yes, just at the thigh. Q.: Supposing that bird had been washed by the owner prior to sending it to the show, would he be bound to have seen that mark? A.: He would be a very careless owner that did not see it. Q.: A person who says he identifies this bird and states that he put it to two shows and washed it before putting it to the shows, and found no mark upon it, what have you to say to that? I should think he was making a mistake. Q.: Is that mark on the bird before the court a natural mark? A.: It appears to be a natural mark. I saw the parents of the bird. They are both typical big birds, much after the same style. The hen is an exceptionally high-coloured hen. The father is a good-coloured bird, and the mother, which was mistaken for a cock, has very good colour. As a young bird it was exhibited as a cock. Q.: What have you to say about Mr. Allison's stock? A.: He has a very high standard of stock.

Cross-examined: I have had twelve years' experience of the Fancy. Q.: Is there anything outstanding about that bird there? A.: It is a good-headed bird. Q.: Did you ever see a bird with a better head? A.: Oh, yes. Q.: Are you familiar with the kind of Canaries bred in Aberdeen? A.: I have seen one or two of them. Q.: For all you know that might be an outstanding bird in the Aberdeen show? A.: As far as I know, it might be. Q. So that it might strike an Aberdeen fancier much more than it would strike you as an exceptionally fine bird? A.: Yes. Q.: What about the colour of the bird? A.: It is a good colour. Q.: Isn't it exceptionally good? A.: I would not say so. In the breeding season a bird that is judged on shape would be very difficult to identify, because in the breeding season it loses that shape. Q.: If a man with 20 or 30 years' experience bred a bird and sold it for £15, and say, six or eight months afterwards could recognise it, would you be surprised at that? A.: It would all depend what he based his judgment upon. If the bird was in show condition there was a chance: It is a most difficult thing to tell a bird in the breeding season.

Mr. Andrew Maxwell (Partick, Glasgow) said he had bred Norwich Canaries and been a judge at the Scottish National Show. Mr. Allison was one of the principal exhibitors in Scotland at the present time. He had few equals in Scotland, and had been very successful. Q.: Judging from what he has exhibited at the various shows, do you think he is quite able to breed young birds fit to hold their own at any show? A.: Yes, I think so. Q.: I think very few of the Aberdeen fanciers go to the south shows? A.: Very few. I have seen Mr. Allison's stock of birds. It is a very fine stock. I have examined the bird in court. There is a mark upon it. Q.: Is that a mark which was bound to have been seen by any person washing it? A.: Yes, I would certainly say so. Q.: Is there anything else about the bird which could identify it after an interval of six months? A.: No. It would not be possible to identify it at this time of the year. The effect of the breeding season is that the bird loses shape. I would not take it upon myself to recognise the bird. It is the difference between the show condition and the breeding condition. I saw the parents of the bird, and they were well matched and likely to produce exhibition stock. Mr. Allison's stock is one of the finest Norwich all-round stocks.

Cross-examined: Q.: Are you prepared to say that a man who has bred and sold a bird for £15 would not know it six months afterwards? A.: Yes. I am prepared to say that. The chances are that he would not know it. Q.: Would you say that the bird in court has any tendency to cross its wings? A.: I find the very opposite.

This closed the proof, and the Sheriff intimated that he would give judgment on Thursday, July 20.

Verdict for the Defender with Costs.

On July 20 the Sheriff delivered judgment. He said that the only question was whether it had been proved that the bird which was exhibited was Lawson's bird or not. He had read the evidence with much attention, and he might say that the result of his deliberations was that the pursuers had failed to prove that the bird exhibited at the show was Lawson's bird. He thought it was a matter of common experience, and at all events it was in the evidence of both sides of the case, that it was extremely difficult to recognise a bird, which had only been seen in full plumage at the show, five or six months later in the breeding season.

The bird which was produced in court unquestionably had a characteristic mark on its left leg, which it was said would have readily been seen by the owner of the bird while he was washing it in preparation for showing. Lawson, the breeder of the bird, had no recollection of that mark at all. There was also a difference of opinion as to whether the bird crossed its wings. Lawson said the wings crossed, but several witnesses said there was no such tendency. Defender's family said that the bird was never out of the house until it died in January, and he was not prepared to say that that was a concocted story. With regard to defender's attitude when the charge was formulated, one would have supposed that he would have faced his accusers and told them that it was a lie. That was the natural plain man's way of treating a matter of that kind, but of course the human mind was a crooked thing, and some people had different methods of doing things. He thought pursuers had been unsuccessful in proving their case, and accordingly assoilzied defender, with expenses.

CANARY QUERIES

J. P.—Answered by post.

A QUESTION OF FEEDING (T.W.B.H.).—When you have the young in a nursery hung on the front of the breeding cage, in which the hen is commencing to sit on another clutch of eggs, you must supply the same dietary for the old birds in the breeder as when the young are in with them. This is necessary in order that the cock may go on with the feeding of the young with soft food until they are capable of feeding themselves well on soft food at least. It is quite possible that the hen will get a little more rich egg food under these circumstances than might otherwise be deemed advisable, but, after all, this is a very secondary matter, as the young brood that are so nearly reared to a point of safety are the first consideration, and the extra feeding of the hen will not necessarily do any harm at all either way. You should also place a small shallow saucer of egg food in the nursery and sprinkle a little dry summer rape on top of it every morning to encourage the young to begin to help themselves, and as soon as you see that they are eating the soft food freely, and beginning to pick the rape, you may remove them to a cage by themselves, leaving the parents at liberty to go on with the other brood. There is no reason why the eggs now sitting should not be productive, and the young safely reared, provided the old birds do not drop into moult, which is the greatest risk now, but even if they should do so and the young have reached a week or so old, you should be able to save them by hand-rearing. It is not at all unusual for young birds only two days short of three weeks old to scurry out of the nest and not return to it, when the nest is touched for any purpose. It is far more trouble to keep a strong robust brood in the nest at this age than to scare them out.

YOUNG DYING (Mrs. Fitzgerald).—Although, as I am now saying almost every week, it is not possible to say with any degree of certainty what is the cause of birds dying, without a proper post-mortem examination, I think the evidence in your case is strongly in favour of the birds dying from the absorption of ptomaine poisons, for which the condition of the hemp seed would be quite accountable. A rather large proportion of it is quite unfit for food, and unless you can get a sample in which the kernel is of a nice milky-white colour when the seed is broken open, I would advise you to discard the use of hemp altogether for the time being. For the treatment of any birds that are now ill add ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate or soda the size of a small pea to the drinking water for three consecutive days, and afterwards give instead four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid in the water every second day for a week. As regards the food, give an unlimited supply of good sound canary seed, and in addition give separately each morning a heaped teaspoonful of egg food, mixed rather on the dry side and well sprinkled with maw seed, to each two birds, and in the afternoon throw out any that remains; wash the vessel and give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp (only if good sound seed), niger, white millet, teazle, summer rape, and broken groats. A pinch of rape may also be placed on top of the vessel of canary seed each morning until it is seen that the birds are eating the canary seed quite freely. A few seed stalks of plantain, trusses of seed heads of shepherd's purse, grass or sorrel seed heads, or blooms of nasturtiums or marigolds, may be given in place of other green food and to amuse the birds. Beyond this follow the general directions in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and your losses should quickly cease.

IS IT CRITICAL? (Heathley).—No, I do not think there is any particular fatality about the ninth day of a young Canary's existence, any more than there is about the eighth or the tenth. That is, there is just the usual infantile risks lurking round about this time, or during the period when the quills are about making their appearance through the skin. I am inclined to think that the cause of your birds dying in the way you describe is that the hen is an indifferent feeder and allowed the youngest and weakest of the brood to "go to the wall." There are many hens that have this fault when the youngsters vary considerably in age and size, as frequently happens when the eggs hatch out on consecutive days, as your brood seems to have done. When a youngster is hatched three days later than the first of the brood, its chances of survival under a careless or indifferent hen are rather remote at any time, and it is to prevent this that fanciers adopt the method of removing the first three eggs as they are laid each day, and returning them on the evening of the third day, so that all may start incubation simultaneously and the young will hatch within a reasonably short period, and thereby all get a fairly even start in life. Should you have any more broods with these obvious inequalities in size and strength, you would do well to so transpose the chicks that all in each nest are reasonably equal in these respects, and you would find these losses materially less in consequence. When this is done an apparently small nest is of little moment, as each chick will be equally able to hold its own in the struggle for existence; but in your particular case it was quite right for you to give them more elbow room, though I doubt if it would have answered in the early part of the season when the nights were very chilly. As I read your letter it seems to me you have in use one of the old-fashioned breeding cages with a separate small compartment built in for the receptacle of the nest. If this is so, you would do well to get a modern type of box cage for another season, as the former type has many very objectionable features. The little peccadilloes of the varicgated hen would probably have been cured by giving her the mate you wished her to have and leaving things to follow their own course after. "Hooson's choice," without the alternative, would doubtless have cured her unreasonableness.

EXCESSIVE LOOSENESS (Tyrone).—Clean cage daily and strew the floor well with clean dry sawdust, and see that the perches are kept quite clean until the looseness is quite removed. Then, the following treatment should soon set matters right. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape only. In addition give separately a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake dusted well with carbonate of bismuth and a pinch of maw seed sprinkled over all. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, and broken groats, or crushed arrowroot biscuit. In the water mix a small teaspoonful of chalk mixture, which may be had of any chemist. When giving this remove the water vessel for an hour or so, then shake up the mixture in the water and hang on cage for a short time, so that the bird will drink before the chalk has all settled to the bottom again; then remove it again for an hour or so and continue these tactics for two or three days, as may be necessary, that is, until the droppings have recovered the normal consistency. Do not give any succulent greenstuff at present, but seed heads of shepherd's purse, plantain stalks, or dandelion seed heads will do no harm.

INFLAMED EYE (H.Y.).—Get a few camomile flowers from a chemist, put six or eight into a teacup, fill up with boiling water, cover, and allow to infuse beside the fire for an hour. Then strain off the clear liquid, add a small teaspoonful of boracic acid, stir until dissolved, and when cold bathe the eye with a little of this liquid each evening for a week or so, as may seem necessary, using a small wad of wool and a drop of fresh liquid each time, and burning at once that which has been used. The loss of feathers is due to the rubbing caused by the irritation, and they will doubtless be reproduced quickly when the eye trouble is removed.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

COLOUR-FEEDING BRITISH BIRDS (Colour).—The questions of colour-feeding or not colour-feeding British birds is quite a matter of taste. My own idea is that a little colour-feed improves certain birds, but a good deal spoils them, better not to feed at all than overdo it. As yours are all together in the aviary, I would advise you to mix a portion of a good brand of sweet pepper in with the soft food, and let them help themselves, probably all will take some; the greedy ones, as usual, will get the lion's share, and come out strongest, and as these will probably be the Greenfinch and Siskin, no harm will be done. It is just possible that some will refuse to touch it. If either of these should happen to be the Bramble, Redpoll, or Chaffinch, it will not matter, as these birds are not improved by feeding. A good natural coloured specimen is hard to beat. Now about the quantity; commence with just a little at first, working it up gradually to a teaspoonful in six of tho egg-food, which will be quite strong enough. Colour is such an unknown quantity you cannot depend upon a bird coming out a certain shade; it all depends upon the amount of natural colour the bird possesses, and the state of its health; weakly birds never come out so rich as the robust ones. (2) The sample of wild seed sent is quite useful, it contains many different species. Give it to the birds in addition to their regular seeds, and let them select what they like. As yours is a mixed collection it is possible all will be eaten. (3) Your note on the Cuckoo is quite usual, the young ones generally find their way to gardens and shrubberies, where their particular food would be plentiful.

NO LUCK (Leo).—I am sorry your season has been a bad one, but I fear others besides yourself have been disappointed. The trouble with your Greenfinch is caused by an error in diet, certain food perhaps does not suit this particular bird. Where several are kept, the same food will sometimes keep most of them healthy, and yet you will have one or two doing badly on it. Your treatment should be as follows:—First cage the bird off by itself, give an aperient of ten drops of syrup of buckthorn in one ounce of water, repeating the dose two days later. Allow a spoonful of scalded or soaked rape seed daily, and the same quantity of soft food; give no other seeds until it is eaten. Squeeze a few drops of fresh lemon juice in the drinking water daily. As your bird will soon be moulting, the new feathers will appear then on the bare places, if not before. (2) It is the usual practice to allow muling pairs to fly together for part of the winter at least; this is done to let the birds get thoroughly used to each other before breeding time. Occasionally one can notice that certain birds take to each other; these should be paired together if it does not interfere with one's plans, as these mutual friendships generally tend to success. By letting them all fly together occasionally they lose all fear of each other, and friendships are strengthened. At this season of the year they can be caged as most convenient.

MAGPIES, JAYS, AND JACKDAWS (Magpie).—The best way of feeding the larger British birds is to have a sound staple food, such as Melox or high-class chicken meal, soaked in hot water or gravy. Give them all scraps from the table, such as potato, suet pudding, bread and milk, lean meat, etc. Offer occasionally a small dead bird or mouse, beetles and any large insects you can procure. A few acorns, maize, and barley, will be acceptable, besides fruit. All these should not be given at once, but managed so that the birds get a variety in diet. (3) The cage or aviary should not be less than 3 feet in length. Short lengths of broom handles make capital perches, two of these placed one foot apart will do admirably. Magpies, Jays, and Daws all make an effort to talk, but of the three I prefer the Magpie. Get a hand-reared bird and commence his education at once by repeating a few words to him every time you go near the cage; he will soon imitate you. Wire netting makes a good front to the cage, the mesh should be ¾ or 1 inch; it looks neater than a larger one, and prevents the bird getting his head through. Water and food should be placed outside. As a rule cats will not molest these large birds. One good blow from the powerful beak is sufficient for most pussies.

TROUBLE WITH JACKDAW AND JAYS. (E. T.).—I fancy from the particulars you send me that you are giving your birds too much meat. This should be used sparingly with all birds kept in confinement. An aperient will probably put them both right. Give ten drops of syrup of buckthorn in one ounce of water, and let them have this to drink for one day, then repeat two days later, and afterwards give them a dose occasionally. Reduce the quantity of butcher's meat; but if you can get a small dead bird or mouse, you can let them have it. I would also advise you to give them a little fruit of some kind daily. If the foot of the young Jay is at all sore, bathe it with a solution of boracic acid. Keep cage and perches perfectly clean. Read reply to "Magpie" in this issue.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

BLUE-FRONT WITH BRITTLE FEATHERS AND DIARRHŒA (M. F. H.).—Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Diet: Seed mixture, ripe fruit (any kind it will take), dry biscuits, crusts, and a little plain cake, nuts (shelled and unshelled), grit, cuttle-bone, water, and a chunk of wood should be continually in the cage. It can have green peas and a piece of raw carrot, and other green food. Give also a little boiled maize; boil till soft (the corn should remain whole and not be a wet sticky mass), drain off the water, add ten drops of cod liver oil emulsion, stir with a fork and supply when cool; this must be prepared fresh daily, as it soon turns sour. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia into the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days well colour the water with chemical food. Keep in as regular a temperature as possible and out of all draught, yet not in a stuffy corner; it must have light and air without draught. Report progress in two or three weeks.

BIRD MEDICINES AND BUDGERIGARS. (Espérance).—The medicines referred to are good for all species of cage birds; but I cannot say if they are now good, though if kept as you state they should be. You should remember what they appeared like when received, and if no change has taken place it should be a reasonable inference that they are fit for use; more than this, I cannot say. Re chemical food, colour the drinking water lightly with this at first, and when it becomes accustomed to it it can be given much stronger, but at first they often refuse to drink the water if it is at all highly coloured. Keep the bird in a fairly regular temperature, but where it will get light and air, yet not be in a draught. It has been a bad year for birds, the dull, wet, cold weather has been responsible for many losses among all classes of birds.

HAND-REARING BUDGIES AND COCKATEELS (D. I. P.).—I must apologise for having informed you wrongly, but the book in question was written by a successful breeder of both species, and I quite understood it contained the information asked for. I must confess to not having read it. Personally, I have never bothered with hand-rearing either species, but a lady aviculturist has had much success with the following method: The really troublesome part is the first few days with quite young birds, but they soon learn to eat from a dish and take to white millet quite naturally as soon as they are able to crack it. For the first two or three days the food must be given quite sloppy, and is simply poured down their throats (of course only a drop at a time); the food used was Osborne biscuits and crushed wheat, varied with "Uvceo" and crushed wheat, made moist with weak milk (condensed milk and boiling water). They were kept in a snugly lined basket in a warm part of the bathroom, and while unfledged, were lightly covered with a piece of flannel to take the place of the brooding parent.

WHAT PARROT? (A. R. B).—Your query must have gone astray, or it would certainly have been answered. Green Parrakeets are almost legion, and it is not always easy to answer from a written description. It is not a Budgerigar, but, I think, a young Ring-necked Parrakeet, and it cannot be sexed at present as the young birds and adult hens are similar in plumage and have no ring round the neck, like the adult males. Diet: Seed mixture, dry biscuits, ripe fruit, green food, shelled nuts, and a little plain cake, grit, cuttle bone, water, and a chunk of wood should be continuously in the cage.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation he infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Graves.—Budgerigar died of acute pneumonia.

"Hard Luck."—Death was due to peritonitis, or inflammation of the membrane lining the abdominal cavity), due to rupture of the intestine.

BOOKS THAT HELP

Both the Novice and the Expert are the

"CAGE-BIRDS" BOOKS

They comprise expert advice on everything appertaining to the keeping, feeding, breeding and general management of Canaries, Mules and Hybrids, British and Foreign Birds. Send along at once for those most suited to your requirements.

On all matters relating to the fitting up of the accommodation for your birds you had better consult their construction and furnishing, by H. Norman, and note the best way to house your birds.

Money spent on suitable cages is well spent. Certainly. Make them yourself? Make the book shows you how.

Many Photographs and Art Plates as well as Articles.

Cloth Gilt, 2/3 post free. Stiff Paper Cover, 1/8 post free. Profusely Illustrated.

Wisely fed birds are healthy birds, and healthy birds do you service. Avoid all errors of diet in feeding them, therefore will help you to feed them properly. It is especially valuable at the season when wild foods are to be had in such abundance, merely for the gathering.

There are many sketches and illustrations of all the best known wild plants.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL.

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVIARIES and CAGES, BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DISEASES & THEIR CURE SEEDS, Etc., and devotes a separate chapter to each individual variety. Get a copy now; it will help you during the breeding season.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

HEALTHY BIRDS

That is what every fancier wants, and can have by using Ditchfield's Bird Medicines. We don't want you to make your bird-room a doctor's shop, but we do advise you to keep a bottle of Ditchfield's Medicine there.

DITCHFIELD'S TONIC DROPS.

are a guaranteed cure for Not Singing, Soft Moult, Slow Moult, Going Light, Feather Plucking, Dulness, and Inflammation of the Bowels. Also if you are having bad luck with your young birds try our Tonic Drops; they prevent Going Light, and aid digestion so common with young birds. Ditchfield's Tonic Drops are undoubtedly the grandest Pick-me-up ever introduced for young birds. They are invaluable when getting them on hard seed.

DITCHFIELD'S FAMOUS REVIVO.

is absolutely unequalled for giving new life and vigour to birds, and for producing that smart, tight appearance of plumage so much desired by all fanciers.

The above two Medicines given on alternate days will bring any bird into first-class condition.

DITCHFIELD'S SPECIAL LUNG TONIC.

for all Chest and Lung Affections in Cage Birds. Can be given with absolute confidence to the most weak and delicate birds.

DITCHFIELD'S DIARRHŒA POWDERS

for all classes of cage birds is safe and effective and gives instant relief. A pleasant, safe remedy that can be fully relied upon. For young birds these Powders are absolutely unequalled.

All the above remedies are sold in 8d., 1/2 and 2/2 bottles; two 8d. bottles for 1/2, three for 1/8; two 1/2 bottles for 1/11, three for 2/8; two 2/2 bottles for 3/9, three for 5/6, and are sent away POST FREE per return from:—

FRANK DITCHFIELD, BIRD SPECIALIST, OLDHAM.

MAGNET MOULTING MIXTURE.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts, Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2. "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES CLUB

Ninth annual young bird show of Canaries and Mules, under the auspices of the Glasgow and Western Counties Norwich Canary Club, City Good Templars' Hall, 122, Ingram Street, July 29. Norwich and Yorks. failed to come up in numbers to former years, but Borders showed a marked improvement both in type and in numbers, and the class provided for Greens fully realised its inception, the competition being exceptionally keen, and the birds of a very high standard. Another innovation was a class for Lizards, which contained a few clear and broken cap golds and silvers of exceptional merit. Mr. W. B. Gillies won special best bird with a very neat variegated Border. Mr. A. McFarlane, Shawlands, judged. The show was well patronised during the afternoon, and many well-known faces were seen. Cl. or Tkd. Yell. Nor.: 1, Dick. Buff.: 1, Dick; 2, 3 and 4, Findlay. Var. Yell.: 1, Dick; 2, Findlay. Buff: 1, Dick; 2 and 3, Findlay. Cl. or Tkd. Bord. CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Annual N.F. show, July 8, headquarters, Crown Hotel, Hill Street; over 90 birds entered, about 30 more than last year. Mr. W. G. Andrews, who had been selected as judge, was unable to keep the engagement owing to working on munitions. However, Mr. G. Baker, Perry Barr, was secured at an hour's notice, and gave entire satisfaction. We were pleased to see so many out-of-town members, Messrs. Kettle (Kidderminster), Clarke (Hagley), Loach (Wolverhampton), Price (Walsall), Greenwood (Coleshill), Richards (Bromsgrove), and Mrs. B. Robinson (Redditch) all being present, in addition to a great number of local members. There were 33 entries in Norwich classes, 34 in Yorks., 22 in Mule and British classes, and 2 in others. This speaks well for the growth of nearly every section of the Society. We were extremely sorry Mr. J. A. Eckersley's birds did not turn up for the Norwich classes after having been entered. WALLSEND MID-TYNE C.B.A.

Annual nest feather show, Co-op. Hall, July 15. Members put up a grand show. Entries were 120, and quality was of the usual high class. The success is undoubtedly due to the energy of our sec., Mr. G. Greenwell. Norwich were not so plentiful as last year, but Border classes were of high merit. Mr. Wigglesworth won the cup with three grand Yorks. for the third year in succession. Mr. McCloud spl. best Canary, a tip-top yell. Nor., it being the first time this young fancier has shown. Mr. Couchman won spl. best Brit. with a very good Goldf., and Mr. Masterman most points in British. Our secretary won the runner-up medal. The attendance was a record. HOLSWORTHY.

There was a nice little collection at the show of the Holsworthy Society on July 27, and quality generally was good. The show was run for the benefit of the fund for supplying comforts to Devon lads with the forces in Mesopotamia and India. Mr. Hicks and his committee had all the arrangements well in hand, and judging by the attendance the venture should prove a big success. Mr. C. A. House judged.

The Shows.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.C.

Meeting Old Boars Head, July 29, Mr. Massey presiding over rather a meagre attendance. Mr. C. C. Dabbs was elected a member. Messrs. Lyons, Massey, and Wareing were elected judges for open show, Dec. 1 and 2. Decided to support the list of rules sent out by the Leeds club.—J. T. Smith, hon. sec.

PLYMOUTH W.C.O.S.

Meeting, Oddfellows' Hall, Morley Street, July 13; Mr. W. French presided over a rather small attendance, seeing the meeting was important. Decided not to hold an open show this year, owing to present circumstances, and some of our members having to join the colours, but to have a members' show, so as to keep the ball rolling. Judge elected at next meeting.—J. E. Rowe, Press Corresp.

LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Meeting held July 29, Griffin Hotel, Mr. F. Heaton chair. Owing to the holidays the meeting had been brought forward a week, but there was a very poor turn-up of members. Breeders round here seem to have done fairly well, taking the samples of weather we have had into consideration. The following is a copy of rules for the Federation of Roller Clubs proposed by the Leeds Club, copies of which have been sent to all the different Roller Clubs.

Rules of the British Roller Canary Association.

The Association shall be called "the British Roller Canary Association," and shall be composed of any number of Roller Canary Clubs of the British Isles.

The headquarters of the Association shall be at —— or such place as shall be decided upon from time to time at the annual delegate meeting.

The business of the Association shall be transacted by a Control Board, such board to consist of delegates drawn from the associated clubs, and shall consist of a President, Vice-President or Presidents, sec., and treasurer, who shall retire annually, but shall be eligible to return to office. Only one delegate from each club shall be appointed, and the Control Board shall meet not less than once a year.

It shall be the duty of the Control Board to issue all rings and deal with all special prizes. It shall also make, rescind, or amend any rules, which must be rigidly adhered to by all clubs, and shall decide the time and place of the next annual meeting.

It shall be the duty of the Control Board to regulate the standard of song, and in no case shall any club alter this standard without the authority of the Control Board, which shall be given at the annual meeting. Any suggested alterations of the standard of song shall be forwarded to the secretary of the Association six months prior to the annual meeting, and it shall be the duty of the secretary to send these suggestions out to all the clubs of the Association to be discussed and voted upon, so that each club can instruct its delegate to vote on the question as to whether an alteration shall be made or not.

Contributions to the Association shall be determined from time to time by the annual delegate meeting.

The rules of the British Roller Canary Club shall be in operation until the first annual meeting of the proposed Association takes place.

It will be understood that the above rules are as proposed by the Leeds Club. All the other clubs have been sent a copy and asked to give their opinion of them; by this means it is hoped to have a proper code formed to be put before the delegates at the meeting to be held in Leeds on November 4 next.—H. Best, sec.

NATIONAL GREEN-MARKED Y.C.C

Adjourned general meeting, July 15, Market Tav., Bradford. Mr. W. A. Cowgill chair. Competitions and prizes were arranged on somewhat similar lines to last year, the first prize in champion classes being the new trophy, to be known as the "Sheffield O.S. Challenge Trophy (presented by Dr. Craig), value £10 10s." Full details of other prizes and their donors will be given later. Result of draw for the ten patronage shows:—October 14, City of Bradford; Oct. 21, Bradford West; Nov. 3-4, Sheffield O.S.; Nov. 18, Huddersfield; Nov. 25, Laisterdyke; Dec. 2, Windhill; Dec. 9, Gt. Horton O.S.; Dec. 16, Bradford East; Dec. 23, Halifax and Dist.; Jan. 6, Shipley.—J. Chambers, Hon. Sec.

ARDWICK AND MANCHESTER.

General meeting, July 18, St. Thomas' Schools, Ardwick. Rev. J. W. Wragg presided over a well-attended meeting. Classification was arranged to meet the requirements of the B.B. and M.C., so that we could apply for their patronage. The agenda included a lecture by Mr. Schofield, but owing to being called upon to work at the last moment, he was unable to be present. The secretary has received a letter saying he will fulfil the engagement next meeting night, Aug. 1, so turn up in good numbers to hear him. The subject will be "Inbreeding." Owing to many of the members being unable to exhibit at the first feather show, we have decided to hold a nest feather table show, August 15; two sections—open, and amateur and novices; 10 classes, viz., Yorks. yell., buff, Nor. yell., buff, A.O.V. Can. in each section birds staged 8 prompt. Fee 3d. per cage. Special most points and for most birds. Mr. H. Boothman judge.—J. Spencer.

N.W. GLASGOW C.B.S.

Monthly meeting and F.F. show and show of British, Amalgamated Musicians' Hall, Wapinshall Street, June 27, Mr. P. Thom presiding over a good attendance. In the F.F. show over 50 birds faced the judges, Messrs. Park and Fyfe, Norwich; Mr. Park, Yorks. and Bord.; and Mr. Fyfe British, both being awarded a hearty vote of thanks. Nor. Cl. or Tkd. Yell.: 1, spl, spl. best bird, 2, spl, 4, 5, Crawford; 3, Stewart; 6, Graham. Buff: 1, 2, Crawford; 3, 4, Stewart; 5, Houston; 6, Sloan; 7, spl, Pringle. Variegated. EAST ANGLIAN NORWICH P.C.

Meeting at Norwich, July 27, Mr. J. J. Smith chair, and attendance not equal to average. Sec. stated the financial position of the club to date, and announced that he would do this at each meeting. The balance to the credit of the club has reached a very respectable figure, and this was regarded as very satisfactory. Subs. for ten members had been received that day per Mr. Chapman, the energetic sec. of the Lynn Society. The correspondence received since the last meeting was most important, and the points raised occupied almost the whole time at disposal. Sec. was instructed on the lines in which to reply to a letter from the Lynn members asking for information relating to patronage, etc. The meeting was delighted with a letter from Mr. Barritt, of Ipswich, and sec. indicated how he intended to deal with this matter. During the evening Mr. Mackley addressed those present on a subject of personal interest, and was heartily thanked for the manner in which he had decided the question. The Committee will at once proceed to draft the rules of the club, and the results of their efforts will be submitted for discussion at next meeting.—R. Tomlinson, hon. sec.

The Colour-Feeding of Canaries.

By W. CONNELLY (Glasgow).

A seasonable article by an old hand that should be of great value to novices and may convey some wrinkles even to experienced breeders.

IN giving my experience on the question of colour-feeding Canaries I would just like to state at the commencement that I am not a staunch believer in the practice at all, for it must be understood that in order to get the rich, warm colour which is necessary to success on the show bench, hot cayenne must be mixed with the tasteless pepper. This is where my strong objection to the practice comes in. If any fancier wishes to find out for himself further reason, let him taste the hot pepper, and I am sure he will not go further into the rights of the question.

I have found out from experience that birds live a longer life without colour-feeding. Some birds certainly become very fond of the pepper, but such birds in my experience have not been long livers. I believe also there is more success to be obtained during the breeding season from non-fed birds than from birds which have been colour-fed. However, as all the rest do it, and it is quite legal, and as the birds certainly looks better in their artificial colour, then we must use it if we happen to breed a few decent youngsters.

War Time Economy.

Some fanciers put their whole stock on the colour-food. This I think is a waste of time, trouble, and expense, particularly during the present circumstances when everything is at such an extortionate price, and economy is the order of the day. Therefore, from my own stock I pick out only a few which I think are really worth the colour-feeding, but even in doing this I do not forget to reserve a few for the non-fed classes or for singing cocks, or feeding hens; these look quite nice enough for me in their natural colour.

After I have picked out those I purpose colour-feeding, I put them into a large flight cage with a perch at each end, and also a perch opposite each drinker; these latter are placed on the bottom bar. I then cover up the whole front with brown paper, excepting for leaving just sufficient room for them to get at the drinkers and seed hoppers.

It is a very important point to keep off a strong light, and I therefore also draw down the window blind while there are no young being reared. The subdued light has the effect of inducing the birds to rest themselves more during the trying period of the moult, and this is very essential.

The large flight helps them to throw off their old feathers and helps to grow the new ones more quickly. The quicker the moult the better, and this is the time to feed them well. At this period I give my birds crushed oats, quaker oats, and oatmeal, "the backbone of Scotland." I also give them plenty of "Red Rat Tails" when in season.

Now we come to the mixing of the colour-food. I get 2 lbs. of tasteless pepper, put this into a large basin, add ½-lb. of brown sugar, and six tablespoonfuls of cod liver oil. The cod liver oil is, I know, a very nourishing food, and is also a preventive against colds. Then I add half a gill of the best brandy. This enriches the colour, and makes the colour-food keep for any length of time.

After mixing this all thoroughly together I take a portion out and put into an air-tight tin especially for use with the British birds, and for introducing to the Canaries to get them to take colour-food to which is added the hot pepper. To the remainder I add 2 ozs. of hot natal, mixing well together and put into a tin.

I begin by giving the tasteless pepper to the young birds when about 10 weeks old, that is to say, as regards the early broods of the season; with the later broods I give it to the young at eight weeks old. They generally take to it freely, but if not I take away the seed boxes at night, leaving the colour-food, and replace the seed boxes next morning about breakfast time, and in the meantime the birds will have partaken of a good quantity of the colour-food.

In the beginning I mix the food in the proportion of 4 to 1—that is, 4 teaspoonfuls or tablespoonfuls of egg and biscuit to one of the colour-food. When they begin to cast their feathers I increase the proportion of the colour-food to one part of colour to three parts of biscuit and egg, and this I continue until the birds have moulted all their body feathers except their head feathers. Then I begin to reduce the strength of the colour back to the 1 in 4 until the birds are completely moulted, and after that I give just a little occasionally.

To make the egg-food I use to one hard-boiled egg six grated biscuits. These may be either tea biscuits, Osborne biscuits, or sponge cake. I have used them all with good results. By way of economy Spratt's Cod Liver Oil Food is a fine substitute for egg and biscuits and is much cheaper. Every third day I give a small piece of sulphate of iron in their drinking water to fix the colour.

To Assist the Moult.

For all my birds, old and young, colour-fed or non-fed, also for the British during the moult, I use the following mixture: I get sixpennyworth of saffron from the chemist, put this into a large jug, add about a quart of boiling water, let it stand by the fire all night to draw out all the colour from the saffron, then add fourpennyworth of sweet spirits of nitre and half-gill of dark rum. This mixture I find is a grand thing to assist the birds in casting off all their old feathers, and in producing a fine colour in the new plumage.

If with any of the old birds any difficulty is noticed in the starting of the moult, or if they become stuck in the moult, I add just a little flowers of sulphur to the egg-food, put them into a box cage, and turn the back of the cage to the window so that they have just sufficient light to see their way to the seed and water.

Another good plan is to bring them into a warm kitchen, and when they have well started return them to the bird-room. Great care must be taken when giving the sulphur as it opens all pores, and they are apt to catch cold; I therefore adopt this plan only as a last resource.

I give my birds during the whole time of moulting plenty of linseed, and the bath as often as they will take it. Those that are shy of the bath I spray well. Nothing beats this for putting sheen on the feathers, and helping their growth.

When the birds are well through the moult those that are intended for showing can be run into their show cages, and a small piece of colour-food can be placed on a pin fixed between the wires to finish them off.

As a last word to the novice I would say feed your birds well, keep them clean, and they will repay you for your trouble.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

General meeting and table show, Deansgate Hotel, July 17, with a good attendance. General business was October show arrangements. Result of table show:—Yell. Yorks.: 1, 2 and 3, Wilkinson; 4 and vhc, Riley. Buff: 1, Wilkinson; 2 and 3, Wilson; 4, Riley. Nor.: 1 and 3, Hayward; 2, A. G. Smith; 4 and vhc, Raynes. Brit.: 1 and 3, Fairhurst; 2, Mitchell. Wilkinson took sp most entries, and Riley sp for judging competition. Next meeting Aug. 21. Sorry to have to report the death of one of our members in Mr. Barrass, the old Lancashire fancier, but I expect a full account will be reported by the Rochdale Society.—J. Green, hon. sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, July 27, headquarters, Seven Stars, St. John Street, Wolverhampton, Mr. Willows presiding over a large attendance. New member accepted, Mr. A. Gooding, London. The following were selected to judge at annual show, Nov. 9 and 10, Mr. Netherwood, Chorley; Mr. Willows, Wednesbury; and Mr. Tomlinson, Newcastle, Staffs. Members who were unable to be present please note the August meeting will be held a week earlier, Aug. 24, when Mr. H. G. Hill will give a paper on the training of the Roller Canary. On conclusion of business several members brought birds for explanation of different tours, Mr. Willows being elected as judge, and a very interesting and educational time was spent. A hearty vote of thanks closed the meeting.—J. W. Thomson, Hon. Sec.

Twitterings.

The Annual Open Show of the Abertillery C.B.S., which will be held in aid of the local Penny Fund, is fixed for October 18. The hon. sec. is Mr. W. Newell, 62, Princess St., Abertillery.

Many thanks to yourself and Mr. Norman for the excellent illustration of my wing ticked yellow Yorkshire on the front page of Cage Birds, writes Mr. A. W. Farmer. This particular youngster I have shown three times, each time under a different judge, and on each occasion it has taken the special for best Yorkshire, so I consider it has had a good start in life.

In "British Birds" for August, Messrs. Witherby and Co., 326, High Holborn, one shilling monthly, Mr. J. H. Owen continues his "Breeding Habits of the Sparrow Hawk." The records of the recovery of marked birds will repay careful reading. They show that in many cases birds return again and again to their birthplace so long as they survive the dangers of their yearly double journey.

The opening article in the July issue of Bird Notes, the journal of the Foreign Bird Club is on Grebes, by Mr. W. S. Bally. Mr. D. Dewar concludes his very interesting notes on Bird Catching in India, this last instalment giving the method of catching small birds on lined canes jointed together like a fishing rod, a system which is sometimes employed in England for the taking of such birds as Golden-crested Wrens. Other articles are "Visits to Members' Aviaries," by Mr. W. T. Page; "Some Colony Birds," by the Rev. C. R. Dawson; and "Early Notes of the Season," by Mr. E. H. Bright.

House Sparrow, Tree Sparrow, or Hybrid.

In our issue of July 22 there appeared a letter, under the heading of "A Bird that would not go Away," describing how the owner of a bird, about the identity of which he was in doubt, took it to a London show, with the result that it was pronounced to be a Tree Sparrow. The following week we published a letter from Mr. Knight, the Hon. Sec. of Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S., in which it was stated with confidence that the bird was "quite an ordinary specimen of the Tree Sparrow," and that amongst those who had definitely made this statement was one of the oldest of British bird exhibitors, Mr. W. Shakespeare. As it was upon our own suggestion that the bird had been taken to the show for expert opinion, in order that the owner might get corroboration of our own decision that it was a House Sparrow, we wrote asking for the bird to be brought to our office a second time. Further to make sure, we invited a gentleman whose knowledge is second to that of no one to be here to see the bird.

In due course the bird was brought, but it had died in the meantime through the breaking of a blood vessel in the brain. We are sorry to have to differ from the authorities at the Highgate Show, but there is no doubt whatever that the bird is, or, rather, was, as we said at first, a House Sparrow. A wing of the dead bird is being kept at our offices for the inspection of anyone interested, or we would send this by post upon the promise of its being returned to us.

THE PRIZE QUESTION FOR THE WEEK.

THE question for this week is "What is your favourite British Finch, and how do you keep it?"

Answers must be accompanied by a coupon cut from this week's issue, and must reach the office of Cage Birds, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., not later than the first post on Tuesday next, August 8. The coupon appears at the foot of this page, and the Editor's decision must be accepted as final.

The half-guinea prize for the best answer to "What is your favourite Canary, and why?" is awarded to Mr. R. Dugdill, 176, Valley Road, Streatham, S.W., whose letter appeared on page 429 of our last week's issue.

OBITUARY.

Mr. ROBERT BARRASS (Rochdale).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. J. Butterworth, Hon. Sec., Rochdale O.S., that I have to inform you, and fanciers generally, of the very sudden death of Mr. Robert Barrass on Saturday, July 22. He was laid to rest on July 26 in the Rochdale Cemetery in his 69th year, and was followed to his last resting-place by the following members of the Rochdale O.S.: Messrs. T. Collings, S. Entwisle, J. Sutton, R. Blincoe, J. Liddle, T. Ashworth, J. Buckley, and C. Whitehead. The Oldham Society was represented by Mr. W. Hardy, and the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. by the Hon. Sec., Mr. Green.

Mr. Barrass was one of the first members of the Rochdale Ornithological Society, and was the Hon. Treasurer from the inception of the club until his death. He was a man without fear or favour, always working for the benefit of the club, and his favourite bird the Lancashire Coppy, also, to a lesser degree, the Lizard Canary. He bred the finest Lancashires ever shown on the bench. Not for a year or two, but for the last thirty years, he could always put a winning team of birds on the show bench. He had judged at most of the shows in the North, and always gave satisfaction. He will be sadly missed by all who knew him, and our deepest sympathy goes out to his wife and family in their sad bereavement.

I am home on leave till Monday, writes Mr. H. Lewis, The Zoo, Wellington Road, Handsworth, Birmingham, and Mrs. Lewis tells me she gets a lot of enquiries for birds, etc. I should be glad if you notify your readers that I am serving with His Majesty's Forces, and have closed the trading department until further notice.

Private Arthur Downs, late of Manchester, but now "somewhere in France," writes expressing good wishes and saying that he would be glad to hear from his old Mancunian friends. His address is Private A. Downs, 34269, 2nd Manchester, 30 Division, A.P.O., Section 17, I.B.D., B.E.F. Private Downs says he gets his Cage Birds every week as at home, and wishes all a successful season.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

All applications for patronage of the Border Fancy Canary Club must be sent before the last Saturday of this month. Application forms can be had by applying to the Secretary, W. B. Smart, 13, High Street, Loanhead.

In the City and Suburban Show report, in "C.B.," July 22, writes Mr. S. Richards, you credit Mr. Knight for winning special for best in section with his charming Waxwing; it should read S. Richards.

Mr. A. E. Thorpe, Hon. Sec. of the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.S., writes that admission to the table show of the society on August 15, at St. Thomas's School, is free, and that friends will be welcome. The birds will be staged at 8 p.m.

Mr. T. R. Trower, who resigned from the Committee of the Canary Supply Co-operative Association three or four weeks since, writes that he specially wishes his resignation to be made known, as "several of the customers of Trower and Co. very strongly object to my belonging to a trading concern dealing with Canaries, and do not know I have resigned."

Brechin C.B.S. has decided to holds its open show as usual, on Nov. 4, writes Mr. J. Crabb, Sec., and has engaged the following well known judges: Norwich, Mr. J. Calderwood, Kilmarnock; Borders, Mr. W. S. Clark, Irvine; and British, Mr. A. McLean, Larkhall. The classification has been extended in Green and Cinnamon Borders, and there are four unflighted Norwich classes, and a few extra classes for British. Secretaries kindly note date to avoid clashing.

"LITTLE WORLDS."

An Outside View.

The writer of a letter to the "Times," headed "Small People and Small Outlooks," says, among other things: "If you turn from some attempted realization of the daily and hourly happenings in Flanders or at sea, to the contemplation of, let us say, half-a-dozen weekly papers picked up at random from a bookstall, you might almost rub your eyes and wonder if the people for whom they are written are living in the same universe as yourself. They are; but it is a universe made up of little worlds and little interests; and it is the going on with those little interests, the inhabiting of those little worlds, that makes life sweet and desirable, and that ultimately makes people willing to offer sacrifices in order that such life may continue to be possible. It is only very great souls indeed that can inhabit the universe; it is only people of a wide outlook and experience and education who can find their chief interest in the large world of public affairs. For most a habitation much smaller, much more intimate, has to be found.

These little worlds are endless in their interests and varieties—sports, hobbies, arts, industries all go to their composition; and each little world, each hobby, has a "press" of its own, or at the least some little paper which comes forth weekly, in which the enthusiast can see the preoccupations of his soul reflected in type, and stimulate them by pondering on methods, "wrinkles," and accessories.

Just to take a single example, there is a whole world of people in England profoundly occupied with little birds in cages, and the breeding, feeding, housing (and of course selling) of them. If you pick up one of the papers referred to you will find your whole vision of things reduced to a microscopic scale and be plunged into a world where the minutest matters assume, as in a bilious nightmare, gigantic proportions. You will find an excited correspondence on the merits of a particular kind of perch for birds in cages; you will be confronted with a reputation secured by the invention of an implement known as a "tin drinker"—not (as you might imagine) a vessel of tin which performs the action of drinking, but one in which the problem of how it can be drunk out of has been triumphantly solved. And you will find in this world all the features of your larger world reproduced on a minute scale—correspondence, parliaments, conferences, discussions, speeches, frauds, scientific discoveries, financial triumphs and failures; and you will find some man, who in what you would call ordinary life is a seed merchant, a plumber, or a carpenter, referred to with awe as one of the "leading lights of the Fancy."

In all these worlds it is possible to be eminent, though the mere man in the street may have never so much as heard your name. And one who has to take orders all day and submit to the reproofs of soulless superiors in an office may break out at evening into a rare effulgence, and even have testimonials presented to him, and be the object of awe and envy to those whose footsteps are as yet on the lowest rung of his particular ladder."

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

In the Courts.

A Warning to Cat Owners.

At Solihull County Court, Aug. 29, an action was brought by Richard Thomas Barron, Sparkhill, against Thomas Lewis, Sparkhill, to recover £11 9s. 6d. damages done to prize Canaries and alleged to have been caused by defendant's cat. It appeared from plaintiff's evidence that he had an aviary containing 80 prize Canaries at the back of his house, and on Sunday, May 21, he went to the aviary and found a cat inside with a Canary in its mouth. The breeding cages had been upset, and several birds were flying loose in the aviary. Plaintiff went in and picked the cat up and recognised it as the defendant's, as he knew it very well. He threw it down and it ran into Lewis's garden, and he showed Mrs. Lewis the cat with the bird in its mouth. Subsequently he found six birds had been killed, and two so badly injured that they had to be destroyed. Twenty eggs were smashed. Plaintiff wrote suggesting a neighbourly settlement, but no reply was received, and on the plaintiff's solicitor writing, defendant denied that he was the owner of the cat.—Mr. A. C. Shirley, secretary of the City of Birmingham Cage Birds' Society, spoke as to the amount of the claim being extremely moderate.—Evidence having been called to support plaintiff's story the defendant went into the box and denied that it was his cat. —Similar evidence was given by Mrs. Lewis and a neighbour.—His Honour said he had come to the conclusion that it was the defendant's cat which did the damage. Cats were given much license to roam about, but he thought it was a duty on the owner to take reasonable care that cats were not allowed to wander on to other people's premises and into bird houses. In this case that duty was, he thought, neglected, and judgment would be given for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed and costs.

"CAGE BIRDS" PRIZE QUESTION COUPON

By J. W. N.

A Series of comprehensive articles, which will embrace the proper management of all kinds of birds in captivity. The housing, feeding, general management, diseases, breeding of species and of Mules and Hybrids, and finally, the birds themselves will all be treated of as the series progresses.

THE plants suitable for an aviary are many and varied. The ideal plan, it seems to me, is to have it all jungly growth, except a path to the shelter or food-hoppers. This can be covered with gravel or sand, the former for preference, as it is easily raked over and can be renewed at frequent intervals. The centre of the aviary should be kept comparatively clear of high growing plants, as those prevent the birds from exercising their wings.

To Beautify the Aviary.

One of the most useful plants, and probably the one most in favour with those who have aviaries, is the privet, which can be bought very cheaply and affords a good bushy shelter. Perennial sunflowers will help to brighten the interior, as also does a small rockery covered with nasturtiums. Canary creeper is well adapted for covering wood work, but many prefer to have this hidden with Virginia cork which gives a very rustic and finished appearance and is strongly to be recommended. If any small pieces are left over delightful nesting places can be made with them.

For the jungle old gooseberry bushes, pampas grass, oats, wheat, nettles, and seed-bearing grasses are all excellent, and if some of the bird seed is scattered occasionally, it will germinate and the birds will have it more in the form in which they pick it up while in a state of freedom.

To complete the aviary plenty of twiggy branches should be supplied, both in the shelter house and in the flights. In the breeding season, however, nests assume a position of vital importance. I do not propose to write a treatise on the different sorts of nests, for their name is legion, but simply to give a few standard types which are easily procurable.

I have already mentioned the method of making use of corners by forming them into nesting places with cork and moss. The British Finches that breed in captivity can usually be relied on to build their own with perhaps a little outside help, provided they have the materials.

A Useful Nesting Material.

One of the best lining materials for nests is purified deer hair. It is the most expensive, costing about 1s. 6d. per lb., but as one pound will make between 80 and 100 nests it cannot be considered a luxury. It can be hung up in small racks supplied for the purpose, care being taken to place them out of reach of wet. This, with a liberal supply of dried moss, is usually all that is required, provided sites, such as earthenware pans, small boxes, travelling cages, etc., are supplied in likely and unlikely spots under the covered flight. For Foreign Finches small rush nests are very suitable. These usually cost about 6d. ready made, and are a good investment for those who keep this type of bird.

Foreign birds usually require a more varied selection of nesting places than British. Budgerigars, for instance, seem to have the greatest liking for wired cocoanut husks with a small hole at the end. Although many other kinds have been tried for this bird, this, the oldest, is still the favourite.

Large foreign birds such as Cockatiels and Parrakeets need some sort of box in which to nest. A small barrel slung up, and with a small hole in the end, has been tried with very good results. Mr. C. P. Arthurs' description of a home made nesting box for Cockatiels, Roselles, Pennants, etc., might with advantage be quoted here. "Get a piece of deal ⅞ inches thick, and 7 inches wide. Cut off three lengths, 16 inches long for two sides and top, one 22 inches for bottom and two 6⅞ inches for the ends. Nail on one of the sides against the bottom and the other side edge on to the bottom. The top will then be hinged to one side and shut down on to the top of the other side, leaving the extra six inches of the bottom for the birds to pitch upon when entering the nest. Fit in the two ends, first cutting a hole three inches in diameter near the top of the end which has the projecting piece at the bottom. One hinge to the top, if put in the centre, will be sufficient; the weight of the lid will keep it down without any fastening."

To Obviate Warfare.

Always supply plenty of nests. A good rule is twice the number of nests as pairs of birds. Many a battle royal between hens, to say nothing of the injuring of one or more of them, may be prevented by an observance of this law.

The aviary is now fully fitted up, but losses, apart from injury and sickness, may occur in two ways, by the birds escaping on entering the aviary, and by cats. The first one is very infrequent if the door is made as prescribed previously, but to make absolutely sure a double door may be used, or a curtain hung on the outside, taking care that it reaches the ground. The door should be placed in a positon in which a good view of the whole flight can be obtained, and if a few knocks are given before entering, losses will be a negligible quantity.

Cats are a more difficult proposition, and some owners complain almost bitterly of them as of mice. Many birds, specially young ones, roost on the wire netting. This seems to be almost a rule with Budgerigars, and they fall an easy prey to prowling cats. If they are not clawed through the mesh they may get off with the loss of a leg. This state of affairs can only be avoided by the use of a double wall of netting which need not be of half-inch mesh, a wider one will be quite sufficient and cheaper.

The aviary is now finished, and anyone who has experienced the keeping of birds in this manner will fully bear me out in advocating it as the ideal method, not only for the maintaining in health and plumage of his birds, but also for the enjoyment provided by the birds themselves, who will amply repay him for his trouble in erecting, by allowing him to watch their habits, appearance and movements at close quarters.

All About Cages.

Unfortunately the aviary is not for everyone. The exhibitor whom steadiness on the perches means 50 per cent. of marks, can only use it occasionally at such times as the moult, or if the bird goes sick. A cage, therefore, being often the permanent home of some feathered captive, the greatest pains should be taken to make it habitable and suitable to the wants of the individual.

The first essential for a suitable cage is size. There are only two occasions when a cage under fourteen inches long should be used, and these are to steady a newly caught specimen and to exhibit a bird in.

Cleanliness is the next. The health of your bird is directly dependent on the condition of the cage. Imagine yourself shut in a small room where you ate, slept, and performed all the functions of life, and see what an importance cleanliness would assume under these conditions.

Almost as important, but not quite, is warmth, or rather freedom from draught; this determines the type of cage, and the position of the cage will be fixed by the necessity for light, air, and ventilation.

The example of everything that a cage should not be is to be seen in many of the windows of any residential quarter. Everyone is familiar with that abomination of open wires very often made of brass, and usually hung in the very position in a window in which it will get the maximum of draught. With this as a warning in front of us, we shall proceed to a more detailed description of cages.

The ideal type is that known as the box cage. It is made of wood and only the front is open wire. This protects the inmate from draughts, gives it a certain amount of privacy which is specially important in dealing with newly caught birds, and, if properly constructed, is capable of being thoroughly cleaned. The wood used in the making is generally pine, or American white wood, but the more expensive kinds such as mahogany are often employed.

If the bird-keeper intends to make his own cage he can buy the wood ready planed and squared from nearly all large dealers. The back is best made with what is termed "three ply." This will not warp or crack, so should be used in preference to other kinds. For the front, punched wire bar fronts are the most suitable. These can be bought in all sizes, and are almost as cheap as buying the wire and bars to make them, to say nothing of the improved appearance, for unless one is an expert with iron and solder, a very sorry looking object is usually the result. The ease with which this type of front can be removed for cleaning or repainting makes them especially suitable.

Suitable Cages Described.

The size of the cage must necessarily vary within wide limits, from the small one into which the freshly caught Britisher is placed up to the large flight four or five feet square, capable of accommodating twenty or more birds. Where many birds are kept it is as well to have stock sizes; apart from the look of uniformity which this gives to a bird room, the ease with which they can be stacked or taken down and exchanged from either rack or shelf will be found to greatly lessen the labour.

A good cage suitable for Finches or for any bird about the size of a Canary is from 14 to 16 inches long, 12 to 14 inches high, and 11 inches from back to front. If four inches at the bottom is boarded up, the bird will be kept warm and have a certain amount of privacy, while it will prevent the seed and sand from being scattered broadcast. Two perches should run from the top of this to the back of the cage and be about seven inches apart. This will give a sufficient jump, and yet allow room for the tail to swing round without fraying against the woodwork. These perches, besides being nailed on should be fixed with glue or seccotine, thus giving no harbour for red mite.

The question of the sand tray has been debated periodically, but the consensus of opinion is that it is apt to warp and lends itself to concealing red mite, consequently it is little used among experienced fanciers except in breeding cages. A movable rail kept in position by a wire will allow of thorough cleaning.

A door should be placed at one end for running the bird into another cage before cleaning, bathing, etc., and if always placed at the same end, simplicity in management will result. Another door in the wire front is useful if the bath is to be given in the same cage, as it can be hung in front here.

Fittings should be as plain as possible, and of a design that lends itself to ease in cleaning. For preference, the seed should be in a drawer at one end so that every time the bird goes to the hopper his head does not get continually rubbed against the wire. The argument against this is that the seed is liable to become fouled, but, if sufficient space be allowed between the perch and the drawer this difficulty vanishes. The cleanest receptacle for water is undoubtedly china or glass. If in an open vessel, it is best placed outside the cage on a level with the perch, but drinkers can now be obtained, the body of which is attached outside, but a little spout projects between the wires. The advantage of this with a bird such as a Crested Canary, is obvious.

The only smaller stock cage than this is for the freshly-caught specimen. It need not be so long as the above, and should be three inches less in height. Instead of a wooden roof, canvas stretched over a frame and fastened on is better. This prevents the bird injuring itself by sudden dashes upward if disturbed. It should be remembered that this type of roof is specially pleasing to red mite, so that it should not be used for any length of time without attention.

The Elusive Chaffinch-Canary Hybrid.

Sir,—In answer to May Raynor re breeding the Chaffinch-Canary Mule, I know for a certain fact the cross has been bred at North Wales in a breedng cage; a bird of the kind was exhibited at Pwllheli show about 12 years ago. The judge, however, did not know what cross the bird was, and it did not get a card. The Chaffinch was caught in the winter and was kept in a flight with Norwich hens and bred with a Norwich hen, so the Chaffinch-Canary can be bred with a bit of patience.

Thanks from the Front Line.

Sir,—Please thank Miss Dora Sulman, through the columns of Cage Birds, for the kindness she has shown in remitting to me her share of the prize won by her in the New Year's Painting Competition of your frontispiece. I might say the parcel which she so kindly collected together was received as well, as it arrived to me in the front line trench after having it a bit rough by "Fritz." I wish her still more success with her bird breeding, as well as colouring, and I also wish your paper, Cage Birds, every success, as I get it practically every week, and it is often picked up and read in the trenches by the boys.

The Cardiff Goldie-Linnet Hybrids.

Sir,—Following my recent article in relation to the above, I am pleased to report that although one of the few youngsters proved to be a bad doer after about the eighth day, and was, very properly, destroyed, the remaining three were brought along in right good style, and are now doing for themselves.

In their general scheme of coloration, shape, etc., they strongly resemble Greypates, carrying, as they do, the well-defined yellow wing bars and tail moonings of the Finch. Each also has well-displayed in the ear coverts a crescent-shaped light patch. I do not know if it is a feature with all, or most, British Hybrids, but these, whilst having black toenails, have clear, or flesh-coloured, legs.

Mr. Hurd says he is of the opinion there are two cocks, but is in no uncertain mind as to the popularity of Cage Birds, for since the appearance of the article his shop has been the Mecca of all sorts of birdie fanciers, of all walks of life, even a rev. gentleman running the risks, and, he further adds, "I should never have believed it, Mr. Allsopp." I left him banging in little wooden pegs into the sole of a seaman's boot, with some vim, gusto, pleasure, and satisfaction, mostly the outcome of three little hybrids, and the bond of fellowship which has knit my old friend even closer to the Fancy.

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

Sir,—It must be understood that when I was advising breeders to be cautious in regard to inbreeding, I was writing from experience. I have tried the system which Mr. Crawhall advises in his last letter, and, far from finding it a success, I not only found it wanting, but disastrous, so far as producing show stock was concerned. Several years ago I had a nice Norwich hen, rather above medium size. She had no pretentions to being a show bird, but was bred from the best blood. I purchased a big cock of good strain to mate with her, also without show points, but brother to a big winner. I reared three young cocks from this mating all from one nest, and which were all winners, one of which was claimed at a big show.

My mind at that time was saturated with the theory of inbreeding, and from what I had read I believed I had only to pair one of the cocks back to his mother to produce show birds in profusion. Alas! the schemes of mice and bird fanciers! I didn't produce one from this mating worth more than 10s. Half were nice typical medium-sized Birds, and the other half were big rough specimens, which was just what one could expect when the blood was analysed, because the grandfather was a big stock cock, and the mother a medium-sized hen. That is not the only time in which I have indulged in the practice. I had bred from a cock which suffered from cataract, and, at the third generation, when both parents have had just a tinge of the old cock's blood, some of the youngsters have been attacked with the same complaint; and this year I have bred from the same blood a young Norwich which is blind in one eye, and this bird is the fifth generation from the old cock, although in this case there was no inbreeding.

I am also convinced that stiff hind claws are hereditary. They seem to be handed down from one generation to another with so much precision that one is disinclined to put it down to coincidence. These are the reasons why I would advise caution in inbreeding, and why I would repeat that only the best stock should be used, and that of the healthiest.

Mr. Crawhall asks why size cannot be produced by inbreeding if big heads can be produced. He has not shown that big heads are to be produced that way. So far as I am concerned, I have my doubts. Further, it is contrary to all the maxims laid down. Inbreeding was always supposed to have a refining influence. And why, if inbreeding will produce size and big heads, should Norwich fanciers have had recourse to the Crestbred? Why also is the Yorkshire so impregnated with the Lancashire?

In conversation with the foremost breeders in this district, I gather that the surest way to success is to know your stock and just what peculiarities they have, and their tendencies in certain directions. But one must also know the variety well, and what constitutes a good one, before success can be hoped for. I am not exactly decrying inbreeding. It has too many adherents for it to be absolutely devoid of good result; but experience has made me cautious, and I should never think of pairing a cock to hens that are both sisters and daughters to him. That is "some" inbreeding. Nor do I think that any analogy can be drawn between cows and Canaries. Cows are not such frail things as Canaries.

Wake Up, Newcastle C.B.S.

Sir,—If your correspondent, "Anxious," was as anxious to do what he could for the Newcastle C.B.S. as he is to stir up strife, it would have been a great deal better. However, seeing he is posing as a champion, I will try and give him something to think about.

What a marvellous man he must be! What an intellect he must have! A kind of Sherlock Holmes! How does he know how many members have paid up, seeing he has not the same facilities for looking at the secretary's books as he would like to have

What a beautiful motto he has. We should try and encourage and help matters, and be sociable one to another. "Anxious" seems to forget the mischief his clique made just over four years ago, when they were the means of making a split in the affairs of Newcastle C.B.S. The society has gone back ever since. Some of the so-called officials were all right if they were in the limelight, but when there was any work to be done they were missing. "Anxious" thinks the society should be reconstructed. I think it is a splendid idea, with "Anxious" taking all the official positions, or, better still, placing his clique in all the posts. They would get all their own way then; they cannot get it now, at least with the present secretary. This brings me to the root of this letter, that "Anxious" has seen fit to send to the world at large. Some of "last year's members," "Anxious" included, seem to be very much upset that the secretary should have the remuneration he gets for his work. When I was elected secretary, on Feb. 15, 1912, there was a difficulty in getting anyone to take the position, and now, after all the "donkey work" has been done, the remuneration appears to be too much. I never sought the position: I took it to try and keep the society together. Why did not "Anxious" put his name to his letter? Was there some reference to this remuneration in the part the Editor deleted? This is just like "Anxious" and his "friends," stabbing in the back.

So there has been a meeting of last year's members, "somewhere in Newcastle," not a hundred miles from the bird market, I suppose.

This is a good idea for the reconstruction of the society; hold your meeting in the Bird Market on a Saturday night. As regards the society proper, "Anxious" ought to know that at the February meeting a resolution was passed that we still hold our meetings on Thursdays, as per Rule 5. The secretary of the Newcastle C.B.S. has had such a shock at the state of affairs of the society, and the reading of the letter that "Anxious" has written at the dictation of the select few, that at present he is recuperating "somewhere in Cumberland," from whence he has penned this epistle.

If "Anxious" and his friends have such an interest in Newcastle C.B.S., why have they not paid their subscriptions, according to Rule 6, which says, "Subscriptions must be paid by the May meeting?" Then "Anxious" and his "friends" could have attended the meetings and had their say, and not resorted to Cage Birds to air their grievances. But then Rule 6 also says, "No member shall receive any benefit from the society until subscription has been paid, unless from any worthy cause." This, I expect, will be a worthy cause, trying to get your own back with the secretary. Let "Anxious" and Co. know that I am quite capable of undertaking the duties of secretary without being dictated to by them. I do not require any instruction from them. "Anxious" and Co. are rather late in the day in trying to put matters right.

Sir,—Having been in the hobby for over seven years, and having been let in more than once, I should like to suggest a plan which would protect the honest man in his dealings with others in the hobby.

This is to have a register of members who pledge themselves to be honest. You might print a little book, like a cheque book, and charge members with it, and each leaf would be as follows:—

HONEST DEALERS' REGISTER.

I, the undersigned, do promise, to the honour of the hobby of bird-keeping, to be honest in all my dealings, and in the event of any complaint I give the Editor of Cage Birds the right to take me off the register.

Please put this idea before the readers of Cage Birds to see if it would take on.

An Unenviable Record.

Four Young Birds from Twenty-two Hens.

Sir,—I enclose a cutting from the New York "Nation" which may be of interest to your readers. I hope, however, you won't unloose the anti-reptilians again.

A few years ago I bought 22 hen Canaries, and from them I succeeded in rearing four youngsters. These hens were obviously descended from crocodiles, which, we are told, lay their eggs and then leave them to Providence. That is the sort of "record" not often admitted. If I had known of Cage Birds I should have done better, no doubt, but if the novice buys hens of unknown history, they are likely to be dear.

A. H. Scott.

A Patriotic Family.

Sir,—You will perhaps understand the pressure in which I am endeavouring to carry on my business if I tell you that I have not now one boy out of my half-dozen. They are all in, in some form or the other. Some of them have been in the thick of it. For instance, the baby of the family, who would still be serving his apprenticeship under normal conditions, was with the Norfolks in Gallipoli, and knows all about Suvla Bay. He is a "Kitchener," and has been from the commencement.

The next boy to him is in the Essex Yeomanry, and was in the second battle of Ypres. This lad used to be an amateur racing cyclist and footballer. He was in that charge of the Essex Yeomanry which received great praise from General French. He had, as he put it, a nice "little chat" with the King and Queen when in the Canadian Red Cross Hospital; I forget the name of the place, but somewhere on the Thames. He is now a Motor Dispatch Rider with his regiment.

One girl is at the Great Cambridge War Hospital, and another at the Norwich War Hospital. These are acting as professional nurses; another is in France.

Out of all my twelve there are nine helping direct, and the three others I reckon are doing their part, although indirectly. One is taking the place of two able-bodied men who have gone from me, and takes a very responsible part too. The family, you will see, therefore, is doing its part; but what about me? I am nothing, and that is just how I feel about it. The only consolation I have is that it is not my fault I am too ancient to be considered any good. Work? Oh, yes! I have plenty of work, goodness knows, but that does not altogether satisfy me.

Thank God, up to the present, and to the best of my knowledge, all are safe and well, but it is a horribly anxious time for all of us whose dear ones are in the jaws of death for we never know what unhappy news awaits us. After all, it is not the men who are the greatest sufferers, or who are the bravest of all—it is the mothers and wives; that I am certain about.

Canary Breeding on the Colony System.

By Sergt. R. G. SPENCER, R.F.A. (Wimbledon).

In continuation of my article published in Cage Birds of June 17, re the Colony system of bird-keeping—I will now go into the various methods which I adopt when breeding on those lines.

The room chosen should be well lighted, but not so as to let the sun glare in on the birds during the summer time; of course sun blinds could be provided if necessary. The windows inside should be covered with wire netting, say ½ inch mesh, but care should be taken not to nail the wire on the frame of the windows, which would prevent them being adjusted.

The room should be stripped of all paper, and thoroughly dressed down before distemper is used. I always used a light sea blue distemper for the walls and ceiling, and this I consider cannot be equalled for colour.

Having finished the walls and ceiling to your liking, the floor should be covered with linoleum, which should reach up as far as the skirting board. This idea is rather an expensive one, but it saves time, and also ensures cleanliness, which is the chief object of having it; of course second hand linoleum would answer the same purpose if in fairly good condition.

The fixing up of the nest pans and perches should be the next attention of the fancier. Naturally there are usually a few squabbles over perches with birds breeding on this system, so I prefer a few perches in each corner of the room, with a nice large shrub or tree in the centre of the room which can be fixed in a tub with plenty of mould to support it. I have always used a dead shrub or tree, as birds would be sure to start pecking at the green shoots when the spring came, and possibly they would be injurious to them.

The nest pans should be fixed at about a yard interval at various heights round the room, but they should if possible be fixed at the end of a bracket (iron for preference) so as to be away from the wall, this also gives one an opportunity to paint the brackets occasionally with a little turpentine to keep down the red mite. I may point out that the nest pans should not be out of the fancier's reach, nor too low down to the floor. Having fixed the nest pans to your satisfaction the floor can be covered with sawdust or sand as preferred; if sawdust is used a small tub of sand can be kept in the room for the birds to peck over.

The feeding should not be too liberal, and I have found that Canaries do well on three parts canary seed, and one part rape seed as their staple diet. Mixed seed can be given occasionally, but not when rearing young. I have given crushed hemp seed to hens when the young are about a fortnight old, which affords them plenty of substance to feed on.

As regards egg food I used plain lunch biscuits, ground up with the whole of the egg, and just a pinch of caster sugar to sweeten it. As this food soon gets very dry, I gave it to my birds in basins which stood in another basin with water in, and in this manner the egg food keeps quite fresh and moist. Dieting a Colony of birds is very different to cage feeding them, but you cannot better the staple diet as mentioned. Green food can be given twice a week, and can be scattered about, as they are liable to fight when it is put in one place.

As I stated in my first article, the main object is the selection of the stock to start breeding on the Colony system. Every care should be taken in picking out good hens, that is to say, ones that can be relied on to bring up their young to satisfaction. The cocks also should be ones that are not of a quarrelsome disposition.

When the stock is finally picked out the birds can be turned into the room about the end of February, say one cock to four hens, which is ample if the cocks are healthy birds, and may be left to settle down.

Everyone is not of the opinion that this system is a successful one, naturally it is not as regards show birds, but they can be caged in pairs.

For a large number of singing Canaries, for which there will be a great demand, I do not hesitate to say that this is the only way by which they can be produced, and I am of the opinion that in time to come this system will be the one generally adopted throughout the country.

How to Succeed in Canary Breeding.

PRACTICAL ADVICE FROM SUCCESSFUL BREEDERS.

Regular Care a Necessity.

BEFORE taking up the hobby of cage bird keeping fanciers must be sure of themselves. What I mean by that is they must be prepared to make the treatment and care of their birds part of their daily life. Cage birds, in their keeping, form one of the most engaging and fascinating of all hobbies, but they will not stand being neglected. They must be attended to regularly.

One often hears at shows a remark such as: "What beautiful birds, but they must be a lot of trouble, and the owners must know all about them." This trouble is part of the pleasure of a proper fancier, and all the knowledge is easily obtained by taking CAGE BIRDS every week. Things are quite different now to what they were forty years ago, when you could get to know nothing. Still, even in those days the determined fancier managed to work himself to the front; now we have every week, in our paper CAGE BIRDS, interesting articles based on experiences.

The first thing for a person to do who has made up his mind to join the happy band of bird breeders is to find a suitable place in which to keep the birds. A spare room is generally most easily found, but fanciers' wives sometimes object to have birds in large numbers in the house, and in such cases the fancier must look out for a place in the yard or garden. If he cannot have a shed built, then it is easy to take out the door of the coal house, and put in a glass one. This very slight alteration furnishes an ideal place in which to keep a small collection.

Having got the place ready, and having joined the local society, the novice should attend as many shows as possible. He should look out for a fancier who is winning in the particular variety he favours visit his place even if it costs him a sovereign to do so, and even if he only means to purchase a pair of birds, or, which is better, a cock and two hens. There is a better chance with two hens than one, for it may happen that a hen may go wrong at breeding time, and if the fancier has only one then his season is lost.

State your requirements to the breeder you are visiting, give him a fair price, and you will be purchasing his experiences. This will go a long way towards your own success. Remember it costs no more to keep high-class birds than weeds. The expectation of something good from your birds gives a stimulant for extra attention to them, and this in itself means success in the hobby. This is my advice to the beginner.

J. BASTOCK, Moseley.

What a Well-known Roller Breeder Thinks.

IT seems to me that the replies to this question must partake of pretty much the same orthodox or generally accepted ruling principles all round, and doubtless, as all readers will be in agreement on general principles, the relation of the details in each one's particular experience will be likely to form the most interesting reading; in this way each and all may possibly learn something from brother fanciers.

I know, for my own part, that after many years of breeding and keeping Canaries, there are things continually cropping up among the birds that I should be glad to have an explanation of; at the same time, in the course of years' experience, there are a few things one does really learn.

Now, then, brother fanciers, if you are starting Canary breeding, the very first thing you will require is a book for a guide and companion, and of course CAGE BIRDS will be indispensable; it is doubled in price, but it is trebled in value, so you will be all right there. In its columns you will see notices of other very helpful books, the titles of which will tell you which you need.

As birds, to be manageable, must be kept in confinement, you will require either cages or aviaries to keep and breed them in. I am an advocate of cages, and the one I prefer is 22in. long by 16in. high by 10in. deep; this is longer than many use, but none too long. With the two perches fixed near the ends, it gives the birds a good long jump to expand their wings.

Whatever you do, do not start with makeshift cages made of grocers' empties, etc. They may come cheap at first, but you will regret it afterwards. These are bound to warp and crack, and will provide numerous haunts for red-mite, that pest of Canary breeders.

Decide first of all on the size of your cages, and let them be all uniform in size and make (this is important), whether you buy them or make them. If you are handy with tools, cage-making will add to your interest in the hobby.

Simple Cages Described.

Let your cages be as plain as possible, just simple boxes, made preferably of three-ply wood except the ends, which are better of ¾in. pine or good deal, to nail the top, bottom and back to. Make all the sides of one piece only.

Loose wire fronts you must have, and specify to the maker for the sliding door to be 5in. wide. Most makers use too narrow a door, and the nest-pan has to be tipped aside to pass the doorway. A good stout front piece to carry the wire front, seed hoppers, etc., will considerably stiffen the cage.

Do not use sand trays; they provide homes for red-mite, and are of no real service, as the cage bottom will require scraping out just the same with or without them.

A space ¾in. deep should be left at the bottom to clean out the cage. A metal tee scraper is the most suitable for this purpose. Fit a slip ¾in. thick by ¾in. wide to stop this space; it will need no fastening to keep it in place. Enamel the cage inside, and paint or distemper outside, and you have a simple and satisfactory breeding apartment.

Single breeders of the size given can be made of three-ply tea boxes, but if double breeders are required, which are preferable in many ways, larger timber will be required. They should be exact duplicates of the single ones, so that when used in tiers all drinkers, seed hoppers, etc., will be immediately above each other.

I advise that all drinkers and egg-vessels be of clear glass of the simplest open pattern, and all seed hoppers glass-fronted, so that one can see at a glance if all is well in the commisariat department. Flight cages for the young should be made in the same way as the breeders; four feet long gives nice length for a good wing stretch. The fronts should be of two separate widths, and a partition can then be fitted in centre if wished.

The Birds and their Treatment.

Space will probably not allow of more re cages. Now, as to providing the occupants. Whatever the type of Canary chosen, it is very important to get the very best bred birds that your pocket will admit of, and the common advice is to put yourself into the hands of a breeder of note.

This is good advice, but it may pay you to ascertain something about the breeder himself, as well as his birds. Above all, if you wish for success, see that the birds you get are thoroughly healthy, and come of a hardy, healthy strain.

When you have your birds and cages ready, feed moderately; do not treat your birds like fatting beasts. Give them all the exercise possible, and a bath as often as practicable. Keep their cages and surroundings clean; sawdust will keep the birds' feet cleaner than sand for cage bottoms. Water is cheap; never make them drink stale water; never handle your pets roughly; get familiar with them, give them a wee tit-bit when you visit them.

Don't haul the young out each time you visit them; avoid banging door and sudden movements when near the birds; and, finally, do not expect to make a fortune by them. If they pay for their keep, and provide you with a clean and interesting hobby, you will not regret taking it up. When in trouble write to CAGE BIRDS and they will gladly assist you.—HENRY NEVE, Heathfield.

Practical Advice from a Lady.

MY first piece of advice to a beginner is—breed your birds in cages. In this way you will get the maximum of pleasure, interest, and experience, with the minimum of outlay; for even the roughest aviary will cost more than a couple of cages.

Do not think that any cage will do. You will save yourself many unnecessary troubles and perplexities by starting with a real double breeder with a proper partition, etc. Try to give a whole double-breeder to each pair.

If possible, order from a maker in your neighbourhood; you will then get exactly what you want, and will save a great deal in carriage. As you require more cages always get them exactly the same, and you will add immensely to the appearance of your bird room. In such cages, painted with good enamel, black outside and white inside, with white bars, the birds look lovely.

I believe in a good deep layer of sawdust. Many a good egg or chick is lost by falling on the hard, sanded floor, which would have been none the worse if it had landed in deep sawdust. Also the yellow birds look prettier against the pale sawdust. If you use sawdust you are better with a turn-rail, and this is cheaper than a sand tray.

Autumn the Best Time to Purchase.

Now for the birds themselves. Never wait to buy them in the spring. Birds that have travelled, changed their mode of life, kind of food, air, water, etc., seldom do well that season. I believe this is most important. Get your birds the previous autumn if possible.

Never send to a dealer at a distance except as a last resort. Find a fancier in your own or nearest town. Depend upon it there are several. Ask a grain dealer. You will find a true fancier delighted to show you his birds and give you a bargain.

Friendly fanciers will sell you really good birds almost at half price if you take them at the end of the breeding season, and moult them yourself. If you take year-old birds, you will start with them as second year birds, and these are the best for beginners, as they are less excitable. These birds will not be upset by a long journey, you have the advantage of knowing how they are bred and related, and you can see for yourself if they come of healthy stock and from a clean bird room.

Never colour-feed your breeding stock, only the birds for sale or show. There can be no doubt that it is apt to make birds fat and "liverish."

For the actual daily management get "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and follow it closely. This you must have. You will get a very great deal of added pleasure and interest if you get also "Our Canaries," for your library.

If all goes well, leave the cock and hen together. This is the easiest way for the beginner, and the nearest to nature.

The Care of the Young.

When the young are about 14 days old, put them in a larger and clean nest on the floor of the cage, well surrounded by clean sawdust, and put a clean nest pan in the old ring above, and the hen will go to nest again, and the cock will feed the young. If any trouble arises you can put in the partition and shut off the young, therefore try to give each pair a double-breeder, and you will need no nursery cages.

Never despair if the parents fail to feed. It is very easy to hand-feed. When quite young use the little flat sticks called "orange sticks," sold by hairdressers for manicure work, and after about the 10th day use a "Fil-up feeder," and you will have very little trouble.

Rape, well boiled in a penny tea-strainer, and squashed with the bowl of a spoon, can be mixed with the food after about the 7th day. If a chick looks like dying give it one drop of castor-oil and a few drops of warm milk a little later, and it will probably wake up quite hungry after a sleep.

Lastly, get your birds as tame as possible during the winter. You will be far more successful if your birds will let you do what you like with them. The big Norwich birds seem born tame. They are splendid for beginners, but the Border Fancies are the hardiest and most prolific, I believe, and these do not need colour feeding.—(Miss) D. Alston, Stirling.

A Season's Procedure in a Nutshell.

THE advice I should give to a beginner is as follows: Make up your mind which variety you are going to keep, go to a good breeder, or purchase on the deposit system, as soon as the breeding season is over, some young stock. Feed on good canary seed as a staple diet and give occasionally a little hemp, maw, teasel, and a little egg-food.

Let the hens fly together during winter in a large cage. As the season approaches for breeding, say about the end of March, gradually bring the birds into condition with extra egg-food and green-food, such as dandelion.

When you see the birds are in condition, calling to each other, flapping their wings, and continually flying from one perch to another, put them by the side of one another, and as soon as you see them feeding let them run together. Now put in a nest pan and a little hair, and when you see they are going to start house-keeping in earnest, put in a nest bag.

When the first egg is laid, remove it and place a dummy in the nest, and repeat this till the night on which the third egg is laid, then replace them. Book the date, and on the thirteenth day from when you replace them, if all goes well, you should have some young.

On the day previous to the hatching give a bath and a little egg-food, made as follows: Obtain a piece of bread two days stale, and about half an inch thick, and rub up in your hands. Take an egg and boil for twenty minutes, then beat up with a fork with the breadcrumbs. I find this answers admirably.

On the third day give the parents some green-food—groundsel, lettuce, or chickweed—fresh three times a day. The egg-food also I like to give three times daily—about enough to last them till the next time of feeding. When the young are about ten days old I give in addition a little cracked hemp and rape, but do not allow the hemp to remain too long or it will do harm.

As soon as the young are out of the nest, and can get about nicely, part them off from the parents with a wire partition between, and when you see they are doing nicely for themselves take them away and place them in a cage together.

How to Use Colour Food.

I always believe in colour-feeding birds, whether songsters or show specimens, as I find they command a higher price. I mix my colour-food as follows: I get a good quality of red pepper, and to every pound of pepper I add half a pound of moist sugar and two pennyworth of olive oil, mix well, and put in an airtight bottle till required. I hardly ever use eggs for colour-feeding, only one occasionally. I use two days stale bread, and find this answers the purpose well.

As soon as you see the first feathers drop, commence with the colour-food, a little at first, and gradually bring this to the strength required. When you see the first colour appearing in the feathers gradually cut down the strength of the feed, but keep on a little after the moult is finished, in case of any feathers being pulled out by the other birds.

To fix the colour I give a little carrot between the wires, and a little sulphate of iron in the water. I find the birds take the colour better by keeping several in a cage together, but I do not overcrowd. Always keep the cage bottom well strewn with grit, and a piece of cuttlefish bone hung in the cage. Give plenty of fresh water and a good bath on suitable days.—T. PARGETER, Banbury.

A Modest Commencement Advocated.

IF I were asked to give a beginner in Canary breeding advice as to how to start in the hobby, the first thing I would ask him or her would be: Is this a sudden whim, or have you been interested in cage birds and their welfare long?

If the former, I would say, do not think Canary breeding an easy, go-as-you-please game; it is one that must be taken seriously, and the thought of the birds must come before the thought of other pleasures. When one keeps live stock of any description, and especially for breeding purposes, every care and attention must be devoted to them, for one must understand that the birds depend for their every need entirely upon their owner, and are not able to feed their young and rear them unless they themselves are well cared for.

If the latter, then the advice above need hardly be given, for knowing that birds cannot be in breeding condition unless in the best of health, they would not think of neglecting their pets for other pleasures.

I would further say, do not, for a season at least, go in for first-rate and expensive stock, expecting to breed winners at the first go. Get two pairs of common Canaries, say, at about 12s. 6d. per pair. Why I say two pairs is because perhaps one might get one or other of the birds in a particular pair that did not hit the mark, and then one has the other pair to fall back on.

If only one pair was purchased, and disaster came along, then, unless the breeder was an ardent enthusiast, there is the possibility that he would throw up an interesting hobby in disgust. If, on the other hand, he, or she, were fairly successful in the first season, there would be greater hopes for the future.

Now, how to get the stock and equipment. First I would advise him, if he had a birdy friend in the town, to purchase from him his birds, and also to ask his advice and help in regard to the purchase of cages, unless he was inclined to make his own, in which case he would take a pattern in his eye of his friend's cages, and make them the same. Anyhow, I would advise the use of the double-breeding cage, as this pattern has such a great advantage over the single one.

His birds and cages ready, then, taking that he had got them at the beginning of the year, he should commence giving the hens a pinch of niger seed, and the cocks a pinch of maw, every third day until about a month before the time to pair up the birds, then give a little egg and biscuit once a week for a fortnight every other day, until ready; but do not, on any account, cram them with stimulating food too quickly, as birds forced into breeding condition are never so strong, nor do they go about their duties so well, as those that are gradually brought on, and which thus come into condition more naturally.

When nesting has actually commenced, do not get over anxious and fuss about too much; just go about your ordinary duties in the bird room as if nothing untowards was happening; let the birds think you are not bothering them, and they will go on much better.

A lookout for the first egg is kept, and one is naturally a little excited, especially if it is the first egg one has had laid for him. Do not drive off the hen to take it out. Go gently to the cage, pretend to look at the seed or water vessels, or give a scrap of green food, to get the hen to leave the nest, then gently remove the egg, and substitute a dummy. Do the same each morning until the three are laid, and then, on the evening of the laying of the third egg, return them, and leave the birds as much to themselves as possible.

Take careful note of the date, and on the evening of the thirteenth day afterwards give a little egg and biscuit food. I myself also give hemp seed as well, but do not give green food until the young are about three or four days old.

With good luck, and good feeding parents, the young will be ready to leave the nest at from twenty-one to twenty-four days' old, and if the pair are then ready to nest again, let the young ones be put on the other side of the double breeder, with the wire slide between; the old birds will feed them all right until they can pick for themselves, which should be from a month to a day or two after.

Keep soft food in the cage with the young until they can well crack the seed, and then do not cut off the supply too suddenly, or, in all probability, the digestive organs will go wrong, or such things as inflammation of the bowels set in.

After a year of common stock breeding, and the experience which will have been gained, I would advise the beginner to select the particular breed of Canary he likes best, and go to a reliable breeder, and purchase what he can afford. I would also advise him to join a Cage Bird Society, if there is one locally, as he will, by its means, become acquainted with many bird friends, and will thus quickly increase his knowledge, because to a true fancier it is not a trouble, but a pleasure, to help a novice over the stile.

W. Liddett, Newark.

Begin with Commoners.

My advice to beginners in Canary breeding is to start with two pairs of common Norwich. I think them the best for a beginner. If he should have bad luck the first year, a lot of money is not lost. If he goes in for expensive pairs, unless he has really got the bird fever, he may leave the fancy for ever.

Make your breeding cage 36ins. by 9ins., have a wire slide in centre, and put the cock one side and the hen the other. When you see the cock feeding the hen through the wires, draw the slide and put the nest-pan in, and a little nesting material for them to play with. When you see the hen in real earnest put plenty of material in the rack, and let them pull it through the wires.

Always have elder perches; they are cheap red mite traps. Bore a hole in each end, and there you will find the red mite, if any. Always use plenty of Keating's powder in the nest pans.

Never take the cock away from the hen unless it is necessary, as the young get on so much better with the cock. Never encourage the hen to go to nest when she has young, but if you see she means it put another nest-pan in the other side of cage, and give her plenty of nesting material; then she will not be so likely to pluck her young, and the cock will finish feeding them. Always read Cage Birds, for there you will find plenty of good tips from different fanciers.

When you have learnt to breed and manage these common pairs, go to a good fancier who breeds his own winners, and get him to match you a couple of good pairs up, transfer the eggs from the good pairs to your common pairs, as the latter will feed better. Then you will soon be on the road to success. If you do not get a card the first time try again.—T. Golsby, Hugglescote.

How to Keep Roller Canaries.

Bird keeping is perhaps the most popular hobby there is, and the breeding of the Roller Canary fills the thoughts of more Canary breeders since the suggestion of the capture of the Canary trade.

The beginner should always be careful in the choice of Roller Canaries, especially when the breeding season is approaching. My first attempt was a failure, the hen bird proving of no use, but the second laid her first egg a week after mating with the cock bird.

The best mixture to get the backward birds into breeding trim is hemp, maw, niger, linseed, and gold of pleasure. This mixture should be given on alternate days to the hens, and to the cocks twice a week.

When the hen is sitting it is best to keep up with some egg food or other soft food, give her a little every three days, as well as the usual canary and rape seed, and she will not be then upset by the change. When the young have hatched, give her some every day and also some cracked hemp.

Whenever a hen shows any signs of lacking in her feeding of the young I have found a salt bath refreshes her, and seems to have the effect of making her feed the young with renewed vigour. The young are generally out of the nest at the age of three weeks; then put both soft food and the mixture of cracked hemp, canary seed and rape, gradually getting them on to seed altogether.

When they are about eight or nine weeks old they will begin to moult, and it is best to cage them off separately, as they sometimes grow quarrelsome. Before they begin to moult, throw in a few nasturtium flowers, this will give a nice tone to the new feathers. When they are moulting they need some nurishing food as it is a very trying time for them. Beside the usual canary seed, give them some hemp, maw, linseed, and broken groats, but crack the hemp for the young birds.

Let the young Rollers hear the cock sing as much as possible before the moult, and after as well, then select the young for size and song. In winter keep the birds on canary seed and rape with a little hemp once a week. Always have a piece of cuttle fish bone in the cage, never forget the bath on warm days, and always have plenty of clean sand on the bottom of the cage.

If birds are well looked after when they are young, you seldom have any trouble with them after. I might also mention that I have reared all my young Canaries on "Spratt's Cage Bird Food," and they are strong, healthy young Rollers.

By the REV. C. B. JOLLIFFE (Cardiff).

On June 20 the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe put a question to the members of the Cardiff C.B.S.: "What Advantages can the Society offer its Members." The lecturer proceeded to answer his own question, and in doing so pointed out methods which should appeal not only to the members of his own society, but to those of every other in the Kingdom. By the courtesy of the Rev. Mr. Jolliffe we are enabled to reproduce the lecture for the general benefit.

Remember, one of the greatest dangers to the pedigree breeder is that it may become a business from which the hobby element totally drops out. His children have no place in the business: they are forbidden to enter the bird-room, made to go about the house on tip-toe, and woe betide them if the door should happen to bang and father hears it! In the days which lie ahead there will be for these children no gracious memories, only—"Don't talk to me about Canaries; I had enough of them when I was a boy."

Now all this must go! We must find a place in our hobby for the wife and children, and the genuine collecting of birds' nests and eggs gives us scope.

Let the society cultivate the elements of brotherhood, of sympathy, of readiness to advise in all things pertaining to the keeping of birds in captivity. Let us convince one and all that reliability, honesty, truth and straightforwardness are things to be counted on as between member and member—a sort of birdy freemasonry.

We should deem it our bounden duty to see that an offender of the elementary laws of honour and brotherhood has no place in the association of gentlemen. Let us see to it that these 800 readers of Cage Birds who reside at our very doors have every opportunity extended to them of joining our ranks and reaping the obvious benefits which we can offer them by close and fraternal association.

What educational advantages the Society can offer the "aviculturist" and the keeper of birds as pets I have already, to a great extent, indicated To my mind, the "aviculturist" will find such an inexhaustible help in the many excellent articles published in Cage Birds that I feel sure the Society will be hard put to to give more, or better, information, except in the directions I have suggested, and in that education which no written matter can impart, viz., personal acquaintance with the living thing itself.

In the main, therefore, the educational advantages which I shall suggest as being in the power of the Society to offer its members are, more or less, in the direction of breeding those rare and valuable specimens to be seen on the show bench.

The Crowning Luck.

When we consider the number of birds, running into many thousands, which are bred annually by the best brains, with years of experience behind them, and with almost unlimited time and money at disposal, it does seem at times that the manufactured article, the rare choice ideals after which we strive and which manage so tantalisingly to elude our grasp with almost magic fatalism, is after all a freak, something which comes by chance, a mere stroke of good luck.

Let us be under no illusion—the element of luck, chance, good fortune, call it what you like, does enter, and enter deeply, into all our schemes. But do not let us suppose for one moment that the birds which sweep the decks are the results of undiluted chance. It would be the end of all thoughtful, scientific breeding if it were so. The luck is only one element, coming in at the end of the long line of processes, all designed, co-operant, and cumulative. It is not the luck of the horse-racer, a mere speculation, but the good fortune of the steady, plodding, intelligent seeker after the ideal; the crown of years of toil; the trophy of grit, grace, and gumption.

Many a beginner spends his money lavishly, and oftentimes unwisely, even in the matter of cages and bird-room appliances. Had he joined the Society before he purchased a pennyworth of wood and wire, he doubtless would have saved five years' subscriptions right away. Instead of that conglomeration of cages, boxes, wires, and tables, all varying in sizes, shapes, and suitability, he would have learned the value and economy of standardisation, and the attractiveness of well-arranged and artistically-coloured cages and room.

There are bird-rooms from which one turns with a feeling of revulsion, and one wonders how anything can live, much more thrive, in such an atmosphere, and under such improper and discouraging conditions.

As members, we ought to be willing to open our bird-rooms to the kindly inspection of all our members, especially the novice. Let us, however, keep an eye on the mean sneak who comes crawling round about show time in order to see what birds he should keep at home because yours will pass his, and just how many he needs to send in order to pick up the special for most entries, and, at the same time, save threepence. Of such an one—"Facta non verba." deeds not words.

A Haphazard Commencement

We are all more or less amazed at the manner in which we began our first year's breeding. No preparation, no pairing-up process. A box, a nest pan, a barrowful of moss and charpie, a tin of mixed seed, a bottle of water. Into this we tossed a cock and two hens, only to find the cock fought both the hens, and when he had had enough of this the hens fought each other even more than the cock fought them. It may be we had the luck to get a few good eggs, and chicks, but, alas! no one had said a word about soft food, and we looked the picture of despair when the young died!

And so the first season drew to its close, and we were still buying hens in August "guaranteed ready for nesting." It had been a year of blunders and disappointed hopes: much of which would have been saved had we known of the Society, and been a member.

What I owe to the Society is beyond measure in this respect. I am quite sure the second year of such failures would have been the last year in the Fancy for me but for the goodness of two or three who came to my help and put me on the high road to success. What I wish to note is this: these members gave me of their experience simply because they happened to run up against me, and had the genuine disposition to help a novice.

What if all this experience, and fraternal spirit were organised and harnessed to the work of the Society? It would be an invaluable education if a beginner could have the matured experience of an old hand in lectures, or on question night, and, above all, could get a peep into our breeding-rooms, observe our methods, and come into touch with the vital thing itself.

How many novices ever think of keeping the cock wired off from the hen, even after pairing has been accomplished, until such a time as observation of the vent tells him that the hen is three or four days off laying?

Many a cock, in the beginning of the season, has exhausted himself, and, after bringing his hen into condition, cannot fertilise the eggs she lays. It is the duty of the fancier to bring the hen into condition and keep the cock in prime fettle for the work of the season.

Then there is the matter of position, aspect, light, and evenness of temperature in which the breeding cages are placed. This year I have brought my breeding cages out of my stock-room and placed them four to five feet away from the windows in another room, secured them from every possible draught, and yet given fresh air in abundance night and day. They have faced E.S.E., the sun shining on the birds at 4 to 4.30 a.m., and leaving the breeding-room entirely at 11 a.m. (Greenwich mean time).

Early and Often.

I have seen my hens feeding young at 3.45 a.m., and continuing to do so until 9 o'clock in the evening. The average number of eggs per nest has been five, and I have over fifty youngsters from eight hens and six cocks, with only two nests from each pair for the season. I attribute all this season's success solely to the position after careful preparation of the pairs, especially the cocks.

I cannot stop to speak of the egg food, green food, and other seeds in feeding young, in all of which, in my judgment, it is the duty of the Society to educate the young beginner, and make it worth his while to join its ranks.

What I would say is this: if this Society would carry out these suggestions there is not the slightest reason why the beginner should not straight away have three years' start on such as myself, who was

"Like an infant crying in the night,
Like an infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry."

I am amazed at the many subjects that come clamouring for treatment in this paper, such as the purpose and methods of double-buffing and double-yellowing; the type of birds most suitable for stock purposes; the individual values of cocks and hens, and their influence upon their young; hand-washing exhibitions, with suggestions to young beginners re practice on common crossbreds and even Sparrows; the running of one cock with two hens; colour food; grey lice and red mite; baths; and the steadying of birds for all purposes. I must, however, forbear, and leave these things for future treatment by others, and, if you think fit, at some future time, myself.

I would, however, call attention to one very useful piece of service the Society can render its fanciers, viz., in the direction of table shows. It is my firm conviction that these shows are not the educative force that they ought to be. I would dismiss from them every element of, and inducement to, competition. It is education, and education only, we are after.

Hence we should never appoint a gentleman to judge these birds who is not a breeder and an expert of the variety he judges. Fancy a Yorkshire breeder judging Norwich, and vice versa. I am not suggesting that he cannot do it, and that at our great shows judges do not do so. But for our purpose the specialist is what we want.

How Judges Can Help the Novices.

If it can be arranged, let the specialist judge the birds whilst the business meeting of the Society is being held. After this let the members take a hand at judging, and when the awards are made let the judge publicly state, and point out, in what manner 1st passes 2nd, and 2nd, 3rd, and so on.

I have been to many shows, and watched judge after judge, but am afraid I cannot always follow the judging. If the judge has judged to the true standard and type there should be a reason for placing this bird in this or that position, and there are some well-known judges who are of no educative value to me.

To this show I would especially plead that the exhibition of matched pairs by novices should be made a special feature. Of course, as in all shows, face value alone can count; indeed, in stock pairs of any kind we cannot say until this pair has bred what they will do. I would plead that the champions pass round the hat, and present 1st with 1s. 6d., 2nd with 1s., and 3rd with 6d., as prizes to encourage the novice. Let our very watch-word be "encouragement."

If, in six or seven years of apprenticeship, a man can become an expert in some business or trade, why cannot an average man of brains become an expert in the variety of bird he breeds in a like manner of time? Let us have as many of these shows as we can arrange, for, apart from the educational value to members, they are a genuine blessing to the birds themselves, inasmuch as they all help to acclimatise the birds to show conditions.

If our committee will only take note of these suggestions, there is here matter for a twelve months' programme, and if the programme could be printed in syllabus form, with, perhaps, a special chairman and lecturer to each subject, then I am confident some step in advance, not only to the outsider, but to the member, would be made.

By ZARA.

IN a lovely valley in the beautiful island of Guernsey (London Channel Islanders' Society note the free ad.) stands a picturesque farm kept by a Mr. (I'll call him Smith) who at the time of which I write had seven sons working on the farm, and their favourite hobby was birdcatching.

Now for birdcatching, as every reader of CAGE BIRDS knows, you need the proper appliances. They had good clap-nets, bat-folding nets, call-birds, etc., but the one little "fly in the ointment" was that they couldn't get their brace birds satisfactory. The reason was that they used a brass eyelet from a tie-on label on the brace and the string would twist.

I have for many years had the pleasure (likewise the profit) of supplying the leading dealers with a "brace swivel" that to quote a customer (without his permission) is "a very nice swivel indeed and very neat." I can make them at the rate of six dozen an hour, so one Sunday morning I went out to the farm and gave them a few dozen. This paid my "footing," as it were, and entitled me to come and go at will; a privilege that I used to the full. I joined the happy band of bird-catchers and got my birds for "nix."

Birds by the Score.

We (you will notice I am now one of the crowd) used to catch birds by the score in one pull over of the nets. These were mostly Linnets and Greenfinches, with an occasional Chaffinch, etc. Goldfinches were not very plentiful, but if any came round the farm they were soon caught.

The birds were kept in an old shed, the front of which was glassed in; the nets, call cages, flirt poles (we called them jiggers) and all the catching paraphernalia were hung from the beams above, making the place delightful to the eye of a British bird lover. A large flight wire netted over filled a large part of the shed; in this the Linnets were kept.

Very early one Sunday morning a bird dealer we called "Ginger Jack" came out with a store cage and bought every cock Linnet (about seven dozen) in the flight cage, leaving about six dozen hens behind. He had been gone about half an hour when a rival dealer, George Eager, arrived, and seeing no one in the bird shed, he entered and soon espied the Linnets. He left his store cage in the shed and quickly went in search of one of the boys, and finding one, asked, "How much do you want for those cock Linnets in the flight?"

Now it must be said of George that although he bragged about his knowledge of birds he still had a lot to learn. So the innocent (?) youth replied "Three bob a dozen if you take the lot." "Done!" said George, and they changed hands.

About a week later George called in at Jack's shop and, as usual, began to brag about his birds. "I bought a rattling good lot of cock Linnets on Sunday," said George, "and don't some of them lash out (sing)." Jack went to George's shop to see the rattlers, and quietly told him that there wasn't a cock in the whole lot. George didn't visit the farm for months after that.

'Twas Ever Thus.

The problem what to do with the hen Goldfinches was solved by giving them to a young fellow named Wickings, who took them with a "Thank you very much." What he did with these hens remained a mystery, for some time. However, one Saturday evening, as the boys were going to town, they passed an old fancier's shop, a man who bred and sold Canaries, and chancing to look in they saw Mr. Wickings in earnest conversation with the old man who, putting on his spectacles gazed at four little hen Goldfinches in a wire fronted box. The old chap drew nearer to the gas jet to see better, and the boys outside came nearer the door and listened (which was wrong of them). "Look at the blazes on 'em," Wickings was saying, "they're four young cocks." He got two shillings each for them—enough to guarantee him an enjoyable Saturday night.

Have you ever caught Siskins with a fishing rod? No! Well, I'll tell you how to do it. In the winter of 1898 the island was invaded by thousands of Siskins; in fact, I think the whole supply intended for the United Kingdom must have settled here, perhaps forced to land by the rough weather. People who knew nothing at all about birds were asking what those little green and yellow birds were. It was Siskins everywhere; their call notes could be heard even in the town, and we caught so many that we didn't know what to do with them.

We made aviaries out of pigeon and fowl houses by covering them with half-inch net ting and stocked them with Siskins by the hundred; they are about the easiest bird in the world to catch, we had forty-three at once in the clap-nets, and had six on one limed twig. They even came into the greenhouse after the call-birds, when all we had to do was to close down the lights and shut them in, leaving them till dark, when we could go round with a lantern and pick them from where they were roosting.

Another way of catching them was when they were feeding on the alder trees, we would insert a limed twig in a notch made at the end of a fishing rod, and the birds were so indifferent to our presence that we could touch them across the back, and down they would come. They were so tame that they would eat in front of us as soon as we put them into the store cage; and they can eat, yea! verily.

I remember that I kept a couple of dozen of them in a large box with a wired front, and they pretty nearly "stumped" me buying seed for them; if CAGE BIRDS had been in existence then we could have made a nice little haul, selling them wholesale to dealers; as it was, we sold a large number to a local dealer—never mind his name, as he still owes for fifteen dozen.

A Mixed Shoot.

Every Boxing Day there is a sort of family gathering at the farm, on the occasion of the annual shooting match, clay pigeons, live pigeons, and Sparrows are shot at for three prizes, usually a turkey, goose, and a brace of pheasants. A few weeks before Christmas Sparrow catching commences. This is done with bat-folding nets at night. The roughest nights are selected for going out as the birds roost too high in fine weather; rough weather brings them down to the evergreens and ivy for shelter.

I remember one wild night we went out; we tramped miles, trying the sides of hayricks, thatch, etc., and at last we finished up in the cemetery, where we had some fine catches in the evergreens. Our party numbered about a dozen, one of the fellows had an accordion with him, and gave us selections at intervals. We had with us a large can of Farmer Hawkins' "joy juice," and refreshed ourselves from time to time.

After we had caught as many birds as we needed, and our can had been emptied, we sat around on the tombstones and had some good old-fashioned songs. "Wonderful Words of Love" was one of them, our friend with the accordion playing a sort of vamping accompaniment. We arrived home at length dripping wet, but quite happy.

I never brag about my shooting, I'm too modest, but I had a splendid "bag" once; there was an old duck gun kept in the shed that one of the boys had bought cheap for two francs (1s. 8d.). After it had been loaded with a double charge of powder and shot, lashed to the wheel of the old box-cart, and pulled off at a distance with a piece of string, it was thought to be safe enough to use. We called this gun "Long Tom" (being about the time of the Boer War).

"Dead, for a Ducat."

One afternoon I took it and went off towards the woods. I felt very much like "Deadwood Dick," with the ramrod stuck down in one of my top-boots, and flasks of powder and shot in my pockets. I climbed over the wall into the woods (private property) and there, not twenty yards away, I saw a little bird on the bough of a tree. I thought to myself "If he only keeps still a minute I'll bag him." I drew a bead on him and fired; there was an awful report and smoke!! (You know what that common black gunpowder is).

When the smoke had cleared I couldn't find the bird, but I noticed something slowly descending to earth like a falling leaf; on going up to this I found it was the skin and feathers of the bird, the rest of it being completely blown out. I picked up the skin very carefully, and put it on the wall, when I saw young Smith coming towards me. "I've shot a bird," I shouted. He came up and I pointed to the remains; he looked carefully at it, poked it with the tip of his finger, then turned round to me and said very seriously, "My word, old man, you kills 'em, DEAD."

Eighteen years have gone by since those days, but often when smoking my favourite briar the memory of them is recalled. I still visit the farm occasionally, but most of the boys (now men) have gone their different ways. One is in the 16th Lancers, and several are married. Birdcatching is not done now on a very large scale, but a couple of fine Goldfinches are kept in the stable waiting for something to turn up.

Four-winged Birds.

IF evidence were longer needed that a scientific problem can at times be stated briefly, with no sacrifice to clearness, this model little paper, entitled "A Tetropteryx Stage in the Ancestry of Birds," by C. William Beebe, Curator of Birds, New York Zoological Society, could be cited to advantage. In it the author propounds an idea which is both novel and interesting—that in the course of their evolution modern birds have passed through a four-winged stage, or one in which they possessed both pectoral and pelvic wings, and strong evidence is adduced in its support.

The idea was suggested by noticing, in the almost naked body of a four days' old White-winged Dove, a row of sprouting quills on the membrane which connects the body with the leg, or, to speak more precisely, from below the knee to the pelvis, along the free border of the patagium, and therefore just behind the thigh and parallel with it.

This was seen to be no casual growth, but a series of some twelve stout feather-tubes, provided with one-half that number of definitely placed coverts, which gave the impression of a rudimentary pelvic wing, in correspondence with the true wing of the modified arm.

This interesting observation was made too late in the season for extended comparisons with representative nestlings of many orders of birds, but the same vestigial structures were detected in the embryo Jacana, as well as in the young of the common domestic Pigeon.

Thus, in the one-week-old squab the rudiment appears as a well-defined tract, marked by seven flight-feathers and four coverts; at two weeks there are ten large feathers, and at three weeks no less than twelve, with ten coverts.

Upon one subject all zoologists are agreed: that the modern birds, as Professor Huxley was wont to say, are glorified reptiles, and that the far-famed Archæopteryx of the distant Jurassic Period fulfils to perfection every requirement of a common ancestral type which any theory of organic descent could require.

This long-gone ancestor was of about the size of a Crow, and possessed of a lizard-like head with jaws set with sharp, conical teeth; it was likewise the possessor of a long, vertebrated tail and a reptilian pelvis, but it had also rounded, feathered wings, each of which terminated in three clawed fingers, as well as avian feet.

Moreover, its long tail was bordered on either side with a row of stout feathers, set in a way to suggest that this organ served as a plane, to assist the rather weak wings in sealing flight, from tree to tree.

The free fingers of the wings, like the clawed toes, were doubtless serviceable in holding to the bark, as well as in climbing, for it is not at all probable that Archæopteryx had the power of rising from the ground to any considerable height by the aid of its wings alone.

Archæopteryx cannot be strictly classified as either bird or reptile, for it combines in about equal measure the salient characteristics of both these classes of modern animals. In short, as the Irishman would say, "it was ayther; it was nayther."

If the embryonic or juvenal tract of fugitive feathers on the leg of modern birds were really the vestige of a former functional wing or plane, then, surely, Archæopteryx could be expected to offer unimpeachable testimony upon this question.

Unfortunately, but two specimens of this eloquent fossil have ever been discovered, and as commonly happens they are by no means so complete as could be desired, and on stammer or remain silent upon certain points, but the author believes that they supply the witness needed in support of his idea.

The legs of Archæopteryx show two rows of long feathers on the tibia, in the region of the pelvis and thigh; from this the author concludes that this toothed bird-reptile possessed a feather plane or wing in the membrane which must have stretched between the leg and pelvis, and that with the tail it served as a counterpoise to the proper wings.

Although Archæopteryx could have possessed little power of directive flight, the true wing was nevertheless then becoming a dominant organ, and the pelvic planes were in a state of decline; we must therefore conclude that it was descended from ancestors still more archaic and lizard-like, that possessed membranous wings corresponding to the fore limbs which were used for planing, much as in a flying squirrel.

Some slight power of flapping flight may have been an attribute of the bird-reptiles of the Jurassic Period; but in later ages came the complete concentration of the supporting and directive powers, displayed in flight, the feathered fore-limbs, with all the correlated changes in musculature and respiration which this implies; this change, moreover, was attended by a shortening of the tail to its present proportions, as well as by a reduction of the pelvic wing to the obscure rudiment which still lingers in the embryo or nestling of the present day.

"Millions of years after they were of use," says the author, "the feathers of the pelvic wing are still produced in embryo and nestling. And for some unknown reason Nature makes each squab pass through this Tetropteryx stage. The line of feathers along the leg of the young bird reproduces on the diminutive, useless scale the glory that once was theirs. No fossil bird of the ages prior to Archæopteryx may come to light, but the memory of Tetropteryx lingers in every dovecote."

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL.

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVIARIES and CAGES, BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DISEASES & THEIR CURE, SEEDS, Etc., and devotes a separate chapter to each individual variety.

Get a copy now, it will help you during the breeding season.

BRITISH BIRDS THAT MAKE CHARMING PETS.

Few birds make more attractive or more intelligent pets than the Goldfinch and the Bullfinch. They readily reconcile themselves to captivity and become devotedly attached to their owners. The Goldfinch in our picture won 1st prize at Wood Green Show for Mr Griffin, of Wood Green; the Bullfinch took first at Redhill, it is owned by Miss K. Code, Redhill.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

There's no truer friend than a man's DOG—

That's one reason why he should be well-fed—fed with the VERY BEST that can be obtained—just as a mark of appreciation in return for his friendship.

Many brands of dog cakes are pressed upon unwary buyers as the "very best," but the only dog cakes guaranteed to be superior to all others are those marked with the X in the centre.

Every dog-lover should insist upon being supplied with dog cakes so marked, which guarantees their ingredients to be "Meat Fibrine" and finest selected meals, prepared solely by who offer them in sealed bags and branded packages, the X on every one.

SPRATT'S Dog Biscuits contain NO medicaments or ingredients of a sugary nature—such adulterations being used only in inferior imitations to entice the dog on them.

"He is very imprudent, a dog is. He never makes it his business to inquire whether you are in the right or in the wrong, never bothers as to whether you are going up or down on life's ladder, never asks whether you are rich or poor, silly or wise, sinner or saint. You are his pal. That is enough for him, and come luck or misfortune, good repute or bad, honour or shame, he is going to stick to you, to comfort you, guard you, give his life for you if need be—foolish brainless, soulless dog!"

—From "The Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow."
JEROME K. JEROME.

The biscuit book which fully illustrates and describes the correct food for your dog will be sent post free from

SPRATT'S PATENT LIMITED, 24-25, Fenchurch Street, London, E.C.

SOFTBILL keepers, take expert advice before proceeding to buy and keep the larger species of Insectivorous birds. You will then have no trouble in keeping your pets in the best of health. This advice is offered in "Nutshell No. 26," by H. J. Fulljames. It is a wonderful little work, dealing with most varieties in a highly interesting and instructive manner. Foods and their preparation, and the various styles of cages also receive full attention. Can you breed Mealworms? This booklet tells you how. Post free, 2½d. from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Look at our list of agents; call on the nearest and get it for 2d.

THE Song Thrush and Blackbird.—Full directions how to keep these favourite songsters in the best possible condition; together with directions for hand-rearing the young and the selection of show birds, will be found in "Nutshell No. 4," 2½d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Batty (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1½.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2. "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES CLUB

Meeting, Aug. 5, vice-pres., Wm. Dinwoodie, presided over a moderate attendance. Classification of annual show was deferred till Sept. meeting. Mr. R. T. Campbell, Dunfermline, has kindly promised a lecture for Oct. 7, particulars later. Members admitted: Messrs. F. McGowan, R. Blair, J. C. Coulter, A. McLean, E. Cassidy, and W. Finnigan. Samples of colour-food were submitted from the various vendors, and were carefully scrutinised by those present. Monthly ramble, Saturday, Aug. 12, to Cadzow Forest, Hamilton, train leaves Central Station at 2.55, calling at Rutherglen, Cambuslang, Glasgow. Members to meet at corner of Hope and Gordon Streets, at 2.40. The wild seed gathering in Sept. will conclude the series for the season. Mr. J. McGowan tendered his resignation as treasurer, prior to enlistment next month; the vacancy was left over till next meeting, Sept. 2.—J. H. Adam, Hon. Sec.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS C.B.S.

At a meeting, July 26, Mr. G. Large presiding, and a large turn-out of members, final business of the nest feather show was closed, and this will make the way clear for the Red Cross show, Nov. 3 and 4. It was decided to change the meeting night, also the place of meeting, so as to enable us to make more headway, and have a larger attendance, as there is a lot to be done to make the forthcoming show a success. So members rally round, as strength makes success, to try and raise £50 for the lads that are doing so much for us; they are worthy of all we can do for them. Let us rally together and strike another blow at the enemy by raising the £50 to relieve the suffering and bring comfort to those who have earned it. Open meeting Sat. next, Aug. 12, in the new meeting rooms, Little's Cafe, Dalton Road. Special invitation to all fanciers in the district who will be heartily welcomed.—D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec.

GATESHEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, July 8, Mr. Holden presided over a good attendance. Classification for annual show, Dec. 9, in the Rochester-street Sunday School, decided on: Norwich 8, Crests 4, Yorks. 7, Scotch Fancy 2, Borders (including 4 Greens) 10, Sell. 3, A.O.V. 1, Mules or Hyb. 3, Brit. 12, For. 1; total 51. Judges elected: Norwich, F. F. Laidlow; Crests, Thos. Almond; British, etc., Chris. Waters; judges for Borders and Yorkshires to be selected at next meeting. Decided that sec. write specialist clubs re their patronage for annual show. In connection with meeting, a table show (nest feather) was held, but owing to a lot of our members having a poor breeding season, entries were poor. Mr. Laidlow judged Nor.: 1, Coulthard; 2, 3, Thompson; 4, vhc, Cromarty. Yorks.: 1, 2, Thompson. Members elected: Messrs. J. B. Bell, J. Johnson, Clabby, Bird, Combie, Fairington. Vote of thanks to the judge brought a pleasant meeting to a close. Fanciers invited to join us; entrance fee 1/-; annual subs. 2/6; subs now due.—W. Curry, Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting at Oldham, Aug. 6, with a good number present. Decided to have one of our Club Shows in connection with the Rochdale Good Intent Show, Nov. 4. Decided that the Kingsweir Challenge Cup, generously presented by Mrs. M. A. Burgess, Bristol, be competed for at Manchester and N.O.S. Show, Oct. 27 and 28. The cup is for the best young Lizard in show, and has to be won three times before becoming the property of anyone. A medal will be given by the donor of Cup until it is finally won outright. First show fixed at the Volunteer Inn, Oldham, Oct. 14, Sec. being requested to write to two or three judges for terms. Resolved that a letter of condolence be forwarded from the L. and L.F.A. expressing to Mrs. Barrass and family our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement. By the death of Mr. Barrass a severe loss has been sustained by the Lancashire and Lizard fancy. A good man and a true fancier has gone from among us. Mr. H. Pike was proposed as a member. Plenty of room yet for new members, both in Lancashires and Lizards, sub. 5s., no entrance fee.—John Rukin, Hon. Sec.

LIVERPOOL FANCIERS VISIT OTTERSPOOL ZOO.

One of the most successful gatherings of Liverpool and District fanciers was that of July 30 to visit Otterspool Zoo and Gardens, Aigburth, which place is in the occupation of Mr. Cross, the well-known foreign bird and wild animal importer. This outing was organised by Mr. R. T. Lonsdale, sec. of Garston B.B.A., who was greatly assisted by H. Holden, sec. North Liverpool B.B.A; A. E. Huyton, sec. Bootle C.B.S.; A. G. Hunt, sec. Walton and Everton C.B.S.; and T. R. Jones, sec. Liverpool B.B.A. To each of these every credit must be given for their efforts in getting their members together, and also to Messrs. J. Lloydd, E. Battersby, and A. Wilkins, for energy displayed in looking after the party whilst at Otterspool. Mr. R. Hunter and Mr. Tiffen, two fanciers all the way from Ormskirk, were first to be at the entrance gates, and soon the rest started to roll up by cars from various parts of Liverpool until there were over 60 present. We gave the old lady gatekeeper a busy time, tearing off tickets and collecting our fourpences, which included the usual penny Government tax, and then commenced a walk along a well-wooded drive of some three-quarters mile in extent to the old mansion of the estate, where we met Mr. Cross, who is geniality itself, and who gave us to understand that owing to the war and to our ships being employed in carrying other essentials for the country, his stock was rather depleted. But he was very busy getting his place in order for big arrivals of birds and animals when normal times arrived. He is carrying on this very large place under most adverse conditions, for out of his usual staff of 29 he only has 5 left, but these attendants he generously instructed to go round with the party and show us all there was to see. What attracted our attention principally as bird fanciers was a well-stocked aviary of Budgerigars, Greens and Yellows. Mr. Cross went in this aviary himself, and taking down various husks showed those present the young birds and many eggs in various stages of incubation. There was also a good stock of Macaws, Parrots, Parrakeets, Cockatoos, all caged off or in large flights, and in the numerous greenhouses on the grounds we saw varieties of Peafowl from different countries, Emus and Rheas. One greenhouse was well stocked with Parrots and Cockatoos, Spice Birds, Zebra Finches, and other varieties of small foreign birds. After a careful inspection of the live stock we went in groups to look over the grounds around the house, and what a place it is. If the country was searched from end to end a better place could not be found. The whole length of the south and east sides are bounded by the river Mersey, from whose high banks you have a wonderful view of the Cheshire side, with the hills of Wales as a background. Old English gardens with an old-time bowling green, well-filled orchards, and well-wooded grounds surrounding, making all wish they could have looked over it all whilst it was the residence of that old Liverpool family the Moss's, whose staff of gardeners under normal conditions was 18. As tea was timed for 5, we started to muster at the hall for the purpose of having our photographs taken by the sec. of the Walton and Everton C.B.S., who came prepared, and an imposing group we made. There were altogether 84 fanciers and wives, including well-known fanciers, who are the mainstay and backbone of the Fancy in Liverpool. Mr. and Mrs. Bunner, of cage-making fame; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Metcalfe, whose name I think needs an introduction to no fancier for miles around; Mr. W. Young, the well-known judge from New Brighton; Mr. S. Green, T. Rowlands, Mr. and Mrs. Algie, Mrs. and Mrs. T. Handley, T. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Bratherton, Mr. and Mrs. Holden, Mr. J. Lloydd, the well-known British expert and judge; A. Wilkins, E. Battersby, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, and Mr. Hillman: these are the sort of fanciers one likes to see mustered together, and when we get our photograph I think it will be one of most interesting photos of fanciers taken in Liverpool. I have received a proof from Mr. Hunt, and I can congratulate him on taking such a large group so successfully, and when he returns from his holidays I am sure he will be kept very busy executing orders for his proposed enlargements. After the photograph had been successfully taken we prepared ourselves for refreshment, which I am sorry to say did not come up to expectations, as the caterer I think had no idea how hungry one gets whilst walking about, especially bird fanciers. Allow me to thank all those fanciers who helped to make up the party for the pleasure of their company, also Mr. Cross and his attendants for the manner in which they received us and showed us round, and to say that I trust the fanciers of Liverpool will take up the idea and let us have a real good annual picnic. If this can be done at times like the present I can see nothing in the way of making an outing of this description an annual event, and I trust that older heads than mine will co-operate together and work with the idea of keeping everyone acquainted with each other for the welfare of the Fancy in Liverpool. If I have been the means by this effort of starting the ball rolling, I shall be amply repaid for what little trouble it has been, and shall always be ready with my assistance to any venture that may be the outcome of this the first gathering of the whole of Liverpool societies in making one day's enjoyment in each other's company out of each 365.—R. T. Lonsdale.

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—
"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."

THE STOCK BOOK

Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

CAMBUSLANG C.B.S.

Annual show of Young Birds, Free Gardeners Hall, July 29. Close on 50 birds turning out. Borders were a capital lot and contained some very promising youngsters. Mules and Hybrids brought out ten entries, and here the winner of special for best bird was found in a capital Goldfinch mule, owned by Mr. J. Brownlie. Norwich were a nice lot, but few, and the three classes allotted to British made up a very fine display. Special most points, Crawford and Shaw tied, Brownlie close up for third. Mr. W. Connelly, Glasgow, judged, and his awards were well received. Nor., Cl. or Tkd. Yell: 1, Shaw; 2, Crawford. Buff: 1, Shaw; 2, Proudfoot. Buff Varieg: 1, Crawford. Bord., Cl. or Tkd. Yell: 1, Shaw. CHARLOTTEVILLE F. & U.S.K.S

Fourth annual members' show, St. Luke's Institute, Aug. 7. Considering the time of year the show may be pronounced a complete success. There were 33 entries in four classes, and some rattling good birds were staged, particularly in the Yorkshires, where Mr. H. Cooke won special best bird bred by the exhibitor, with a really smart ticked yellow, in the pink of condition. This bird has been a frequent winner in open. Mr. Cooke staged a fine team of the "long slim 'uns," and won most of the prizes. Another feature of the show was the remarkably fine lot of green and yellow Budgerigars. In these Mr. Killick won special best bird in show with a magnificent green. Mr. G. Gardner judged. The secretarial duties were ably carried out by Messrs. A. Jopson and W. Sills, and the committee gave great assistance. Yorks. (8): 1, spl, 2, 3, res, vhc, c, Cooke, winner already described 2nd slashing young Cinnamon tkd. yell., looks like making a very stylish bird, well on the leg, and very smart action, 3rd Cinnamon tkd buff, lovely feather, neat head, well positioned; 4, hc, Killick. A.O.V. Can. (8): 1, Ede, thick-set buff Nor., soft and silky feather, good head and neck; 2, 4, vhc, Killick, leaden neat Border; res, Ayers. Brit. A.O.V. (7): 1, spl, 4, vhc c, Killick Green Budgerigar, in first position, and a good one; 2, res, Ede and Ayers, beautiful yellow Budgerigar; 3, Ayers, topping Green.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

First annual young bird show, July 27. The event had been looked forward to with much speculation for some considerable time, it being the first open young bird show ever held in Wales at which fixed prize money was offered, and it was felt that the promoters deserved every success for their pluck in attempting the venture, especially under the present trying conditions. Unfortunately entries did not come up to expectations, which was very regrettable, but we were pleased to see that the officials were not downhearted, and intend, in addition to their open show in December, to run another open young bird show next year, when we are sure they will get the support they deserve. It was very regrettable that Mr. Parlett's well-known team did not arrive until 4 o'clock, too late for judging. The wants of the birds were well attended to by a hard-working band of stewards, Messrs. Emanuel, Jones, Baker, Payne, Davios, Bevan, and James, and all exhibits were promptly dispatched at close of show. The secretary, Mr. Challenger, and chairman, Mr. Thos. James, are to be congratulated on the way they carried out their duties, and in them the Society have two able officials who have the interests of the Society at heart. Mr. H. C. Smith judged Yorks. and Borders, and Mr. Allsopp the remainder, Mr. Nicholas, owing to illness, being unable to fulfil his engagement.

BRITAIN'S BRIGHTEST FINCH THE GOLDFINCH.

Winner of 1st prize at Glasgow Red Cross Show for Mr. M. B. Wallace, Glasgow.

an "extremely fascinating little bird," says that he had one which, after some months of good behaviour, developed "avicidal mania" and killed no less than seven smaller birds before he met his own doom at the beak of a Bishop.

My opinion is that however peaceable a bird may appear to be when flying loose in the bird-room, it is never safe to keep several species together in a cage when any one couple is intent on breeding. All birds are more or less curious and interfering in their neighbours' concerns, and a breeding pair resents fiercely such interference.

Though the cock White-throated Finches are ready enough, the hens are said to be shy and reluctant breeders. The Rev. C. D. Farrar was, I believe, the first to rear young of this species, in 1905, and he gives a most entertaining account of his difficulties in providing a sufficient quantity of live ants' eggs for them, as it seems that, like our common House Sparrow, the White-throated Finch prefers to rear its nestlings on insect food. The nest is a very beautiful structure, light yet very strong, composed of fibrous roots and hair. The eggs, large for the size of the bird, resemble those of our common Sparrow

A Sweet Singing Foreigner.

About the same size as the White-throated Grosbeak, and an even better singer, because its song is not only sweet, but very well sustained, is the Alario Finch.

This bird also is soberly coloured, but in place of the chaste grey of the Whitethroat the Alario cock has a bright chocolate brown back and tail, black head, throat, and flight feathers, while the rest of him is pure white.

As in the species described above, the sexes are easily distinguishable, the hen being of a much duller brown all over, and they are imported in pairs from the Cape of Good Hope. This makes them equally desirable birds for intending breeders, especially as they nest quite freely in confinement.

The cock will also mate with a hen Canary, rearing very charming mules. At least, that is what I am told; my Alarios have never had a chance to do so, because until quite recently I had never kept Canaries. The favourite food of the adult Alario is summer rape seed, but the young are best reared on crushed hemp, with plenty of lettuce or other fresh green-stuff.

A more gaily coloured bird, which, while making a pretty contrast in hue, will, as a bachelor at least, agree perfectly with the plainor species already described, is the Blue Linnet, or Indigo Finch, as he is more usually but less happily named.

He is an American bird, whose summer plumage is a lovely cobalt blue, with black eyes, beak and legs. He is exceedingly fond of fresh grass seed, and, because he is in reality a Bunting, he should also from time to time have live insects added to his bill of fare—flies, spiders, or meal worms. Failing these, ants' eggs will be much better than nothing at all.

The Blue Linnet is active, sprightly, hardy, and very pretty, and his song is by no means to be despised. It is not worth attempting to breed this species, as the hen, who is a dull brown coloured little bird, is very seldom imported.

Even the cock Indigo cannot now be had, except for a figure greatly exceeding the price of the two less brilliant species already described, but if a true pair were obtained and they were wanted to breed, they should be kept by themselves in a good sized aviary plentifully furnished with bushes and growing grass.

Another ever-charming little bird who gets on famously in a cage with the other three species is the Avadavat, from India's coral strand. His beak, and his coat, too, in the breeding season, are as brightly red as coral, so that his colour mingles harmoniously with the blue, grey, brown, and white of the other inmates of his home.

Though somewhat smaller than the others, he is a brave little fellow, who easily holds his own among them. He has a bright, clear song, like a bugle call, but some individuals sing much better than others. Spray millet and grass seed are his favourite fare, but, with his cage companions, he enjoys an occasional change to a packet of "finch mixture."

All four species of birds here described are small, but not so small as some of the Waxbills, who can escape easily between the bars of any cage not specially made for them.

The White-throated Finch, the Alario, the Blue Linnet, and the Avadavat may be kept in an ordinary Canary cage, but the larger the cage the better for the birds, who get more exercise therein. The better, too, for their owner, who will derive more amusement from the merry antics of the birds as they chase one another in play, swing upon a spray of millet, or splash about in the ever-welcome bath.

In my own Foreign Finch cage I always keep a regular lawn of grass and daisies, with "forest trees" represented by mignonette, dwarf roses, or other non-poisonous plants growing in pots. If these are frequently changed, and put out every now and then on the window-ledge in a shower of rain, the plants keep on looking quite nice and fresh, and the graceful attitudes of the birds as they climb and hover among the branches will amply repay for any extra trouble occasioned by this kind of gardening.

FOUR FAVOURITE FOREIGNERS.

By DYDDGU HAMILTON.

HAPPY those fanciers who were well supplied with their little favourites before the war began, for in these days of storm and stress there are few who can afford to spend much, either in time or money, upon the luxuries of life. And foreign birds, or at least all the rarer and more beautiful kinds of them, must certainly be counted amongst luxuries, since at the present moment they may scarcely be had for love or money.

Nevertheless, those species I am about to describe may even now be purchased at a reasonable price, and the specimens recently imported seem to be in the very pink of health and perfection, possibly because they are only coming to England in small and well-cared-for consignments. Some of the very best foreign birds among those offered are home-bred, as were three Rosella Parrakeets which were to be seen lately at a well-known dealer's, together with other very interesting if less gaudily coloured members of the Parrot family.

But for cage pets, as distinguished from aviary rarities, the smaller foreign finches are among the most fascinating. Everyone who cares for birds at all must be familiar with the Waxbills, so tiny (some species are less than four inches in extreme length), and so delicately coloured in rose-pink, forget-me-not blue, orange, crimson, and lavender that they cannot fail to remind us of butterflies, as they flit from perch to perch, or hover over the geraniums and mignonette, searching for greenfly and minute caterpillars, which the little birds find a most beneficial change from their usual diet of Indian millet and canary seed.

Much less known than the Waxbills, but an equally charming bird, is a small Grosbeak, generally named the White-throated Finch (Spermophila albigularis), a native of Brazil. It is an excellent bird for beginners, because the sexes are quite distinct, and both male and female are to be found among imported birds. Judging by a recent advertisement in Cage Birds, even now they cost but a few shillings.

Their size is about that of the Lesser Redpoll, not quite five inches in length. The cock's upper surface is a beautiful slate grey, with black on flights and tail, while his under parts are snowy white, with the exception of a black band round his throat. His bill is arched, like a Roman nose, and it is pale orange in colour. The hen is a soft fawn-brown, darker above than below, and her beak is black, but of the same shape as her husband's.

Both sexes sing, the hen almost as well as her mate, though her song is not quite so loud and ceaseless as his. It is a musical song, with some really lovely notes in it, but it is not very varied, and so might by some be considered a trifle monotonous.

These little birds are very fond of bathing, and keep themselves as neat and almost as trim as Java Sparrows. They are amiable birds, and the pair I am describing share a cage with three Bengalese and an Avadavat.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES CLUB

Meeting, Aug. 5, vice-pres., Wm. Dinwoodie, presided over a moderate attendance. Classification of annual show was deferred till Sept. meeting. Mr. R. T. Campbell, Dunfermline, has kindly promised a lecture for Oct. 7, particulars later. Members admitted: Messrs. F. McGowan, R. Blair, J. C. Coulter, A. McLean, E. Cassidy, and W. Finnigan. Samples of colour-food were submitted from the various vendors, and were carefully scrutinised by those present. Monthly ramble, Saturday, Aug. 12, to Cadzow Forest, Hamilton, train leaves Central Station at 2.55, calling at Rutherglen, Cambuslang, Glasgow. Members to meet at corner of Hope and Gordon Streets, at 2.40. The wild seed gathering in Sept. will conclude the series for the season. Mr. J. McGowan tendered his resignation as treasurer, prior to enlistment next month; the vacancy was left over till next meeting, Sept. 2.—J. H. Adam, Hon. Sec.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS C.B.S.

At a meeting, July 26, Mr. G. Large presiding, and a large turn-out of members, final business of the nest feather show was closed, and this will make the way clear for the Red Cross show, Nov. 3 and 4. It was decided to change the meeting night, also the place of meeting, so as to enable us to make more headway, and have a larger attendance, as there is a lot to be done to make the forthcoming show a success. So members rally round, as strength makes success, to try and raise £50 for the lads that are doing so much for us; they are worthy of all we can do for them. Let us rally together and strike another blow at the enemy by raising the £50 to relieve the suffering and bring comfort to those who have earned it. Open meeting Sat. next, Aug. 12, in the new meeting rooms, Little's Cafe, Dalton Road. Special invitation to all fanciers in the district who will be heartily welcomed.—D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec.

GATESHEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, July 8, Mr. Holden presided over a good attendance. Classification for annual show, Dec. 9, in the Rochester-street Sunday School, decided on: Norwich 8, Crests 4, Yorks. 7, Scotch Fancy 2, Borders (including 4 Greens) 10, Self. 3, A.O.V. 1, Mules or Hyb. 3, Brit. 12, For. 1; total 51. Judges elected: Norwich, F. F. Laidlow; Crests, Thos. Almond; British, etc., Chris. Waters; judges for Borders and Yorkshires to be selected at next meeting. Decided that sec. write specialist clubs re their patronage for annual show. In connection with meeting, a table show (nest feather) was held, but owing to a lot of our members having a poor breeding season, entries were poor. Mr. Laidlow judged Nor: 1, Coulthard; 2, 3, Thompson; 4, vhc, Cromarty, Yorks.; 1, 2, Thompson. Members elected: Messrs. J. B. Bell, J. Johnson, Clabby, Bird, Combie, Fairington. Vote of thanks to the judge brought a pleasant meeting to a close. Fanciers invited to join us; entrance fee 1/-; annual subs. 2/6; subs now due.—W. Curry, Sec.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting at Oldham, Aug. 6, with a good number present. Decided to have one of our Club Shows in connection with the Rochdale Good Intent Show, Nov. 4. Decided that the Kingsway Challenge Cup, generously presented by Mrs. M. A. Burgess, Bristol, be competed for at Manchester and N.O.S. Show, Oct. 27 and 28. The cup is for the best young Lizard in show, and has to be won three times before becoming the property of anyone. A medal will be given by the donor of Cup until the Cup is won outright. First show fixed at the Volunteer Inn, Oldham, Oct. 14. Sec. asked to write to two or three people for [illegible] and that a letter of condolence be forwarded from the L. and L.F.A. expressing to Miss Barrass and family our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement. By the death of Mr. Barrass the fancy has lost an enthusiastic supporter, and a true friend. A good turn out at the meeting [illegible] Mr. H. Pike was elected a member. Plenty of room yet for new members, prize-winners and others, subs. 2/6, no entrance fee.—John Taylor, Hon. Sec.

LIVERPOOL FANCIERS VISIT OTTERSPOOL ZOO.

One of the most successful gatherings of Liverpool and District fanciers was that of July 30 to visit Otterspool Zoo and Gardens. Aigburth, which place is in the occupation of Mr. Cross, the well-known foreign bird and wild animal importer. This outing was organised by Mr. R. T. Lonsdale, sec. of Garston B.B.A., who was greatly assisted by H. Holden, sec. North Liverpool B.B.A; A. E. Huyton, sec. Bootle C.B.S.; A. G. Hunt, sec. Walton and Everton C.B.S.; and T. R. Jones, sec. Liverpool B.B.A. To each of these every credit must be given for their efforts in getting their members together, and also to Messrs. J. Lloydd, E. Battersby, and A. Wilkins, for energy displayed in looking after the party whilst at Otterspool. Mr. R. Hunter and Mr. Tiffen, two fanciers all the way from Ormskirk, were first to be at the entrance gates, and soon the rest started to roll up by cars from various parts of Liverpool until there were over 60 present. We gave the old lady gatekeeper a busy time, tearing off tickets and collecting our fourpences, which included the usual penny Government tax, and then commenced a walk along a well-wooded drive of some three-quarters mile in extent to the old mansion of the estate, where we met Mr. Cross, who is geniality itself, and who gave us to understand that owing to the war and to our ships being employed in carrying other essentials for the country, his stock was rather depleted. But he was very busy getting his place in order for big arrivals of birds and animals when normal times arrived. He is carrying on this very large place under most adverse conditions, for out of his usual staff of 29 he only has 5 left, but these attendants he generously instructed to go round with the party and show us all there was to see. What attracted our attention principally as bird fanciers was a well-stocked aviary of Budgerigars, Greens and Yellows. Mr. Cross went in this aviary himself, and taking down various husks showed those present the young birds and many eggs in various stages of incubation. There was also a good stock of Macaws, Parrots, Parrakeets, Cockatoos, all caged off or in large flights, and in the numerous greenhouses on the grounds we saw varieties of Peafowl from different countries, Emus and Rheas. One greenhouse was well stocked with Parrots and Cockatoos, Spice Birds, Zebra Finches, and other varieties of small foreign birds. After a careful inspection of the live stock we went in groups to look over the grounds around the house, and what a place it is. If the country was searched from end to end a better place could not be found. The whole length of the south and east sides are bounded by the river Mersey, from whose high banks you have a wonderful view of the Cheshire side, with the hills of Wales as a background. Old English gardens with an old-time bowling green, well-filled orchards, and well-wooded grounds surrounding, making all wish they could have looked over it all whilst it was the residence of that old Liverpool family the Moss's, whose staff of gardeners under normal conditions was 18. As tea was timed for 5, we started to muster at the hall for the purpose of having our photographs taken by the sec. of the Walton and Everton C.B.S., who came prepared, and an imposing group we made. There were altogether 84 fanciers and wives, including well-known fanciers, who are the mainstay and backbone of the Fancy in Liverpool. Mr. and Mrs. Bunner, of cage-making fame; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Metcalfe, whose name I think needs an introduction to no fancier for miles around; Mr. W. Young, the well-known judge from New Brighton; Mr. S. Green, T. Rowlands, Mr. and Mrs. Algie, Mrs. and Mrs. T. Handley, T. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Bratherton, Mr. and Mrs. Holden, Mr. J. Lloydd, the well-known British expert and judge; A. Wilkins, E. Battersby, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, and Mr. Hillman: these are the sort of fanciers one likes to see mustered together, and when we get our photograph I think it will be one of most interesting photos of fanciers taken in Liverpool. I have received a proof from Mr. Hunt, and I can congratulate him on taking such a large group so successfully, and when he returns from his holidays I am sure he will be kept very busy executing orders for his proposed enlargements. After the photograph had been successfully taken we prepared ourselves for refreshment, which I am sorry to say did not come up to expectations, as the caterer I think had no idea how hungry one gets whilst walking about, especially bird fanciers. Allow me to thank all those fanciers who helped to make up the party for the pleasure of their company, also Mr. Cross and his attendants for the manner in which they received us and showed us round, and to say that I trust the fanciers of Liverpool will take up the idea and let us have a real good annual pic-nic. If this can be done at times like the present I can see nothing in the way of making an outing of this description an annual event, and I trust that older heads than mine will co-operate together and work with the idea of keeping every one acquainted with each other for the welfare of the Fancy in Liverpool. If I have been the means by this effort of starting the ball rolling, I shall be amply repaid for what little trouble it has been, and shall always be ready with my assistance to any venture that may be the outcome of this the first gathering of the whole of Liverpool societies in making one day's enjoyment in each other's company out of each 365.—R. T. Lonsdale.

"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."
THE STOCK BOOK
Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Records of simple and unique character; Cash and Pedigree Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

THE FIRST EDITION OF

The Young Bird Shows.

NOTE.—Secretaries will greatly facilitate the work of ourselves and our printers if they will kindly endeavour to send their reports as nearly as possible as they see these accounts printed, and if they will also write the names of exhibitors as distinctly as possible.

CAMBUSLANG C.B.S.

Annual show of Young birds, Free Gardeners Hall, July 29. Close on 50 birds turning out. Borders were a capital lot and contained some very promising youngsters. Mules and Hybrids brought out ten entries, and here the winner of special for best bird was found in a capital Goldfinch mule, owned by Mr. J. Brownlie. Norwich were a nice lot, but few, and the three classes allotted to British made up a very fine display. Special most points, Crawford and Shaw tied, Brownlie close up for third. Mr. W. Connelly, Glasgow, judged, and his awards were well received. Nor., Cl. or Tkd. Yell: 1, Shaw; 2, Crawford. Buff: 1, Shaw; 2, Proudfoot. Buff Variegs: 1, Crawford. Bord., Cl. or Tkd. Yell: 1, Shaw. CHARLOTTEVILLE F. & U.S.K.S

Fourth annual members' show, St. Luke's Institute, Aug. 7. Considering the time of year the show may be pronounced a complete success. There were 33 entries in four classes, and some rattling good birds were staged, particularly in the Yorkshires, where Mr. H. Cooke won special best bird bred by the exhibitor, with a really smart ticked yellow, in the pink of condition. This bird has been a frequent winner in open. Mr. Cooke staged a fine team of the "long slim 'uns," and won most of the prizes. Another feature of the show was the remarkably fine lot of green and yellow Budgerigars. In these Mr. Killick won special best bird in show with a magnificent green. Mr. G. Gardner judged. The secretarial duties were ably carried out by Messrs. A. Jopson and W. Sills, and the committee gave great assistance. Yorks. (8): 1, spl, 2, 3, res, vhc, c, Cooke, winner already described 2nd slashing young Cinnamon tkd. yell., looks like making a very stylish bird, well on the leg, and very smart action, 3rd Cinnamon tkd buff, lovely feather, neat head, well positioned; 4, hc, Killick. A.O.V. Can. (8): 1, Ede, thick-set buff Nor., soft and silky feather, good head and neck; 2, 4, vhc, Killick, leaden neat Border; res, Ayers. Brit. (10): 1, 2, Rackliffe, rich faced Goldf., good bars, and nicely pencilled, good col. Linnet; 3, res, hc, Killick, good Linnet leading; 4, Ayers, hen Bullie, smart one when in form, novelty; vhc, Ede. A.O.V. (7): 1, spl, 4, vhc c, Killick Green Budgerigar, in first position, and a good one; 2, res, Ede and Ayers, beautiful yellow Budgerigar; 3, Ayers, topping Green.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

First annual young bird show, July 27. The event had been looked forward to with much speculation for some considerable time, it being the first open young bird show ever held in Wales at which fixed prize money was offered, and it was felt that the promoters deserved every success for their pluck in attempting the venture, especially under the present trying conditions. Unfortunately entries did not come up to expectations, which was very regrettable, but we were pleased to see that the officials were not downhearted, and intend, in addition to their open show in December, to run another open young bird show next year, when we are sure they will get the support they deserve. It was very regrettable that Mr. Parlett's well-known team did not arrive until 4 o'clock, too late for judging. The wants of the birds were well attended to by a hard-working band of stewards, Messrs. Emanuel, Jones, Baker, Payne, Davies, Bevan, and James, and all exhibits were promptly dispatched at close of show. The secretary, Mr. Chalkenger, and chairman, Mr. Thos. James, are to be congratulated on the way they carried out their duties, and in them the Society have two able officials who have the interests of the Society at heart. Mr. H. C. Smith judged Yorks. and Borders, and Mr. Allsopp the remainder, Mr. Nicholas, owing to illness, being unable to fulfil his engagement.

FOUR FAVOURITE FOREIGNERS.

By DYDDGU HAMILTON.

HAPPY those fanciers who were well supplied with their little favourites before the war began, for in these days of storm and stress there are few who can afford to spend much, either in time or money, upon the luxuries of life. And foreign birds, or at least all the rarer and more beautiful kinds of them, must certainly be counted amongst luxuries, since at the present moment they may scarcely be had for love or money.

Nevertheless, those species I am about to describe may even now be purchased at a reasonable price, and the specimens recently imported seem to be in the very pink of health and perfection, possibly because they are only coming to England in small and well-cared-for consignments. Some of the very best foreign birds among those offered are home-bred, as were three Rosella Parrakeets which were to be seen lately at a well-known dealer's, together with other very interesting if less gaudily coloured members of the Parrot family.

But for cage pets, as distinguished from aviary rarities, the smaller foreign finches are among the most fascinating. Everyone who cares for birds at all must be familiar with the Waxbills, so tiny (some species are less than four inches in extreme length), and so delicately coloured in rose-pink, forget-me-not blue, orange, crimson, and lavender that they cannot fail to remind us of butterflies, as they flit from perch to perch, or hover over the geraniums and mignonette, searching for greenfly and minute caterpillars, which the little birds find a most beneficial change from their usual diet of Indian millet and canary seed.

Much less known than the Waxbills, but an equally charming bird, is a small Grosbeak, generally named the White-throated Finch (Spermophila albigularis), a native of Brazil. It is an excellent bird for beginners, because the sexes are quite distinct, and both male and female are to be found among imported birds. Judging by a recent advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, even now they cost but a few shillings.

Their size is about that of the Lesser Redpoll, not quite five inches in length. The cock's upper surface is a beautiful slate grey, with black on flights and tail, while his under parts are snowy white, with the exception of a black band round his throat. His bill is arched, like a Roman nose, and it is pale orange in colour. The hen is a soft fawn-brown, darker above than below, and her beak is black, but of the same shape as her husband's.

Both sexes sing, the hen almost as well as her mate, though her song is not quite so loud and ceaseless as his. It is a musical song, with some really lovely notes in it, but it is not very varied, and so might by some be considered a trifle monotonous.

These little birds are very fond of bathing, and keep themselves as neat and almost as trim as Java Sparrows. They are amiable birds, and the pair I am describing share a cage with three Bengalese and an Avadavat.

These cage-fellows, I must confess, do occasionally get a beakful of feathers plucked out of them by the Grosbeaks. Dr. Butler, who describes the White-throated Finch as an "extremely fascinating little bird," says that he had one which, after some months of good behaviour, developed "avicidal mania" and killed no less than seven smaller birds before he met his own doom at the beak of a Bishop.

My opinion is that however peaceable a bird may appear to be when flying loose in the bird-room, it is never safe to keep several species together in a cage when any one couple is intent on breeding. All birds are more or less curious and interfering in their neighbours' concerns, and a breeding pair resents fiercely such interference.

Though the cock White-throated Finches are ready enough, the hens are said to be shy and reluctant breeders. The Rev. C. D. Farrar was, I believe, the first to rear young of this species, in 1905, and he gives a most entertaining account of his difficulties in providing a sufficient quantity of live ants' eggs for them, as it seems that, like our common House Sparrow, the White-throated Finch prefers to rear its nestlings on insect food. The nest is a very beautiful structure, light yet very strong, composed of fibrous roots and hair. The eggs, large for the size of the bird, resemble those of our common Sparrow

A Sweet Singing Foreigner.

About the same size as the White-throated Grosbeak, and an even better singer, because its song is not only sweet, but very well sustained, is the Alario Finch.

This bird also is soberly coloured, but in place of the chaste grey of the Whitethroat the Alario cock has a bright chocolate brown back and tail, black head, throat, and flight feathers, while the rest of him is pure white.

As in the species described above, the sexes are easily distinguishable, the hen being of a much duller brown all over, and they are imported in pairs from the Cape of Good Hope. This makes them equally desirable birds for intending breeders, especially as they nest quite freely in confinement.

The cock will also mate with a hen Canary, rearing very charming mules. At least, that is what I am told; my Alarios have never had a chance to do so, because until quite recently I had never kept Canaries. The favourite food of the adult Alario is summer rape seed, but the young are best reared on crushed hemp, with plenty of lettuce or other fresh green-stuff.

A more gaily coloured bird, which, while making a pretty contrast in hue, will, as a bachelor at least, agree perfectly with the plainer species already described, is the Blue Linnet, or Indigo Finch, as he is more usually but less happily named.

He is an American bird, whose summer plumage is a lovely cobalt blue, with black eyes, beak and legs. He is exceedingly fond of fresh grass seed, and, because he is in reality a Bunting, he should also from time to time have live insects added to his bill of fare—flies, spiders, or meal worms. Failing these, ants' eggs will be much better than nothing at all.

The Blue Linnet is active, sprightly, hardy, and very pretty, and his song is by no means to be despised. It is not worth attempting to breed this species, as the hen, who is a dull brown coloured little bird, is very seldom imported.

Even the cock Indigo cannot now be had, except for a figure greatly exceeding the price of the two less brilliant species already described, but if a true pair were obtained and they were wanted to breed, they should be kept by themselves in a good sized aviary plentifully furnished with bushes and growing grass.

Another ever-charming little bird who gets on famously in a cage with the other three species is the Avadavat, from India's coral strand. His beak, and his coat, too, in the breeding season, are as brightly red as coral, so that his colour mingles harmoniously with the blue, grey, brown, and white of the other inmates of his home.

Though somewhat smaller than the others, he is a brave little fellow, who easily holds his own among them. He has a bright, clear song, like a bugle call, but some individuals sing much better than others. Spray millet and grass seed are his favourite fare, but, with his cage companions, he enjoys an occasional change to a packet of "finch mixture."

All four species of birds here described are small, but not so small as some of the Waxbills, who can escape easily between the bars of any cage not specially made for them.

The White-throated Finch, the Alario, the Blue Linnet, and the Avadavat may be kept in an ordinary Canary cage, but the larger the cage the better for the birds, who get more exercise therein. The better, too, for their owner, who will derive more amusement from the merry antics of the birds as they chase one another in play, swing upon a spray of millet, or splash about in the ever-welcome bath.

In my own Foreign Finch cage I always keep a regular lawn of grass and daisies, with "forest trees" represented by mignonette, dwarf roses, or other non-poisonous plants growing in pots. If these are frequently changed, and put out every now and then on the window-ledge in a shower of rain, the plants keep on looking quite nice and fresh, and the graceful attitudes of the birds as they climb and hover among the branches will amply repay for any extra trouble occasioned by this kind of gardening.

Twitterings.

In the report of the Barrow-in-Furness Show, writes Mr. D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec., A.O.V., 1, 2, hc, c, no name, should be Kent, and 1, 2, in Norwich Yellow should be Skillicorn, not Hudson and McFarlane.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Yorkshire Canary Club of Scotland should communicate with the Hon. Sec., S. F. Wood, 4, Tollcross Road, Parkhead, Glasgow, not later than Aug. 26. Lists of judges and classification can be had on application.

Mr. D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec., Barrow-in-Furness C.B.S., writes that all friends in the district will be welcomed at the first meeting in the new headquarters, Little's Cafe, Dalton Road, on Saturday, August 12, when a start will be made with the arrangements for the Red Cross Show, Nov. 3, 4.

We have received from Mr. J. W. Ramsden samples of his new season's peppers, tasteless and hot. Both are of the very high grade of excellence which has established the reputation of "Ramsden's peppers." Nothing better has come from Mr. Ramsden, even in pre-war times, and this, while being a plain statement of fact, is the highest possible praise. Only the price has been raised slightly, the quality could not be.

Still Going Ahead.

Falkirk, Grangemouth, and Bannock Combined C.B.S. had a meeting on Aug 5, in Oddfellows' Hall, writes Mr. D. Aitken, sec., and fixed show for Nov. 25. Intending members should come forward to next meeting, Aug. 19, for the purpose of selecting judges.

The "Croydon Advertiser" says that a Parrot belonging to Mr. White, of the Elis David Almshouses, is credited with ability to whistle about fifty hymns and songs.

For the second time in my short career as a "breeder of good birds" have you bestowed upon me the favour of depicting one of my specimens on the front page of Cage Birds, writes Mr. E. J. Pegg. I was exceedingly delighted last Friday morning when I received my usual weekly copy to find my "charming Buff Border" (as you call it) in one of the positions of honour. The only other time it has been shown was at Wimbledon, where it again won the 1st and special. Many thanks to you.

Herons Over Central London.

A rather unusual sight for central London was seen last Monday, July 31, writes Miss E. Maud Knobel, when a couple of heron flew over Tavistock Square. It was just about 9 o'clock in the evening, and they were travelling from West to East.

The Limit.

In sending a query which takes three pages of paper in the asking, a correspondent says, "I only take Cage Birds when I am expecting to see a reply to my queries." As these questions are almost of weekly recurrence the circulation of Cage Birds does not suffer materially, for our correspondent has, of course, to buy a copy nearly every week. The twopence thus added to our gross revenue is not all profit. The one little item of setting the reply into print is not an inconsiderable one, and in this one case at least Cage Birds is full value for the money.

THE PRIZE QUESTION FOR THE WEEK.

THE question for this week is "What is your favourite British Softbill, and how do you keep it? A prize of half a guinea will be given for the best reply.

Answers must be accompanied by a coupon cut from this week's issue, and must reach the office of Cage Birds, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., not later than the first post on Tuesday next, August 15. The coupon appears at the foot of this page, and the Editor's decision must be accepted as final.

The half-guinea prize for the best answer to "What advice and instruction would you give to a beginner in Canary breeding?" is awarded to Mr. W. Lidgett, 76, Milner Street, Newark.

The August number of the "Avicultural Magazine," the journal of the Avicultural Society, opens with an account by Dr. A. G. Butler of the nesting of the Lesser Whitethroat in his garden at Beckenham. Dr. Lovell-Keays writes on the nesting of the Malabar Parrakeet in his aviary. Miss Chawner describes "Another Attempt at Breeding Yellow-winged Sugar-Birds," in which the young birds survived for a fortnight. Other articles are "Hybrid Pigeons," by M. Jean Delacour, "Fiji Parrot Finches," by An Australian Bird Lover, and "The Breeding of the Emperor Goose," by Mr. F. E. Blaauw.

Dead Birds that Travel.

Small birds, large birds—even Crows—says the "Daily Express," are being slaughtered in such numbers for food in North Germany that they are now "deserting" to Holland.

Reported Nesting of the Fieldfare in N. Wales.

Reports of the nesting of the Fieldfare in our islands are occasionally made, but they generally prove untrustworthy upon examination. The supposed Fieldfares mostly prove to be Missel Thrushes. Mrs. J. G. Evans, Pwllheli, now writes to the "Westminster Gazette" that a pair of Fieldfares have built in a fir tree touching her house, and that the nest can be looked into from an upper window. She says that a pair have reared their young there for two or three years, but that this is the first time the nest has been discovered.

The Proper Spirit.

Kindly excuse my late entry, writes one of the entrants in our weekly competition, as I did not get my Cage Birds until to-day. The newsagent's child sold my copy to a new reader, and although they volunteered to fetch it back, I would not hear of it, as I knew I could get another. But I felt sorry when I saw you wanted some copy about Linnets, though the thought of that new reader is consolation enough for me. I have never written before, but I will take my time on a few articles shortly. I must not say what I will do; see how I get on with this first. You encouraged such chaps as me when you offered to rewrite articles—lick 'em into shape, as it were.

Close Quarters for the House Martin

"F. G. S.," writing to "The Scotsman," says that under the eaves of a cottage near Stratford-on-Avon there are 86 nests of House Martins. Perhaps the strangest part of the story is that not a single nest is placed under the western eaves. There are 56 on the northern side, and 24 on the south. It is estimated that the young and old birds now in the colony number over 500.

The Return of "Jackie."

"Jackie," the pet Raven of the Welsh Regt., has returned to barracks, and the Cardiff "Western Mail" says: "Two lovable old ladies were visiting a khaki friend at the barracks the other day. As they walked along one of them remarked, "What a pity it is that the dear old Raven has gone; he was such a clever darling!" 'Yes,' agreed the other lady, 'I do hope he will come back.' At the moment a hoarse voice rang out, 'Halt!' The startled ladies looked round, but could see nothing, and would have proceeded wondering. But their progress was barred by a vigorous pecking at the ankles, and then the ladies looked down to see the lamented Jackie making effectual protest at their ignoring his command to 'Halt!' The ladies were held up until a friendly Tommy convinced the bird that the visitors were friends."

BIRD SHOWS AND THE ENTERTAINMENT TAX.

A Valuable Hint for Show Promoters.

In the "Grimsby News" of July 28 the writer of the weekly "Fanciers' Notes" quotes an official letter as follows: It is dated from the Treasury Chambers, Whitehall, S.W., July 25, 1916, and is signed by Mr. Allen Parsons:—"I am desired by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to say that you are mistaken in thinking that agricultural shows as a class are not liable to the entertainment tax. Both (sic) agricultural, pigeon, and rabbit, etc., shows are liable unless the Commissioners of Customs and Excise are satisfied in any particular case that there is a title to exemption under Section 1 (5) of the Finance (New Duties) Act."

This, of course, is a similar decision to the one published in Cage Birds some weeks back, and we are repeating it because of the very important comment which accompanies it, and which reads as under:—

"From the above it will be seen that all fanciers' shows are liable to the Entertainments Tax, unless the promoters can assure and convince the Commissioners of Customs and Excise that they are promoted solely or partially for charity, or for educational purposes and not for profit. Those of us who have had any experience of running shows in connection with our fanciers' clubs and societies, know only too well that those responsible for our shows never go into the thing with the idea of making profit, more than that, they generally expect to put their hands down into their pockets, and this expectation nine times out of ten becomes an unfortunate realisation. Of course there are a few minor exceptions.

"I suggest that promoters of shows should, first of all, before they enter into any other arrangements for proposed shows, write to the Commissioners of Customs and Excise, Whitehall, S.W., and state their case. If the show is being run by an established fanciers' society, a copy of the rules should be sent. These usually give the objects of the society, and show that it is worked not for profit, but for education, and is supported by the members' subscriptions. It would also be well to send the results of past shows and explain what was done with any profit made. If shows are run for charity this must be stated, and then no difficulty can arise. Members' shows, at which the members and visitors pay for admission, are liable to the tax equally with those that are open. If the case is properly put before the Commissioners I think few shows will have to pay tax. But all those promoted by individuals as a speculation will undoubtedly have to pay."

HOW IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

Eightpence Spent Twenty-eight Replies.

"From the small advt. I inserted in CAGE BIRDS I received replies from places as far separated as Whitehaven in the north to Bristol in the south. It is quite impossible to reply to all, though I have done so in the case of those enclosing stamps. I could have sold the birds many times over, and I had twenty-eight replies for my expenditure of eightpence."—W. J. HARPER (Muswell Hill).

"Through CAGE BIRDS I have received an order from Mr. Trotier, New York, U.S.A., for 300 cage fronts and 100 Yorkshire show cages. I may say, through your valuable paper, I have received orders from Durban, South Africa, Spain, and Montreal."—T. SMITH, (Plaistow).

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long, practical experience. Terms moderate.

THOS. BENNETT, Judge of Cage Birds; life experience; terms moderate: 14, Cumberland-rd., Lidget Green, Bradford.

J. W. BRUCE, Coldstream. Judge of all varieties of cage birds; Border and British Bird specialist. Terms moderate.

W. A. COWGILL, 115, Washington Street, Girlington Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

GEO. GARDNER, 11, Haverstock Road, London, N.W. Judge of all kinds of Cage Birds.

G. HOBBS, 35, Queen's Road, Northampton, having retired from business, can judge Canaries and cage birds. 40 years breeder and exhibitor. Terms moderate.

J. HOLROYD, 27, Kingswood St., Gt. Horton, Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

J. R. HOUGHTON, 21, Hatfield Road, Gloucester; judge of Canaries and Cage Birds; specialist in Norwich; terms moderate.

C. A. HOUSE, Briardene, Idle, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and other Cage Birds.

J. W. METCALFE, Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool. Judge of Cage Birds, Specialist Yorks. and Norwich; terms moderate.

W. MUNDELL, 6, Carlisle Place, Manningham, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds.

H. NORMAN, The Eyrie, Salisbury Road, Carshalton, Surrey. All varieties of Cage Birds. Specialist Hybrids and British Birds.

J. PATTERSON, Chirnside. Judge of Cage Birds; all varieties. Wide, practical experience. Specialist Border Fancy Judge.

J. H. PAYNE, 17, Northgate Street, Gloucester, Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Cage Birds.

C. E. SILK, The Aviaries, Emsworth, Hants. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Life experience.

JAMES STANGER, 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, Co. Durham. A.V., Spl., Nor. and Cr.

HENRY TAMS, Orchard Place, Lengton, Staffs. Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Birds. Twenty-five years' Breeder and Exhibitor.

S. TICKELL, 22, Heney Street, Bodmin. Judge of all varieties; specialist Norwich, Cinn. and Liz. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. YARDY, The Aviaries, Hucknall Huthwaite, Notts. Judge of all varieties; specialist in Norwich Plainheads. Life experience. Terms moderate.

J. WILCOCK, The Fountain Inn, Eccleshill, nr. Bradford. Judge of Cage Birds, all varieties.

J. WALSH, Bird Specialist, Blackburn. Judge of Cage Birds all varieties. Specialist British, Foreign, Mules and Hybrids.

G. WILSON, 14, Frizington Rd., Frizington, Cumberland. Judge of Mules, Brit., For. Specialist, Brit., Mules. Life experience; terms moderate.

W. YOUNG, 25, Grosvenor Road, New Brighton. Judge of Cage Birds. Life experience. Terms moderate.

In the Courts.

A Youthful Miscreant.

The county magistrates, sitting at a Children's Court, at Wells, had before them a boy 9½ years old, named Ronald Athelstane Stunton, of St. Thomas Street, Wells, summoned for cruelty to captive birds in Tor Wood by putting their eyes out with a hat-pin. It was proved, partly on the boy's own admission, that he went to a nest in Tor Wood, and there took a young Thrush out of a nest, and blinded it with a hat-pin, and then threw the bird away. The allegation was made that he had done this on previous occasions. Defendant was fined 10s., and the Chairman commented upon the horrible cruelty of the boy.

It is reported that a White Swallow is to be seen daily hawking for flies over a stream in South Devon.

A Labour-saving Tit.

Capt. F. T. Burkitt, in a letter to "Country Life," says that a Blue Tit has brought her brood of three nestlings to a half cocoanut after a few days of carrying bits of the nut to the young in their nest.

Do Sugar Birds Build Domed Nests?

In a very interesting article in the "Avicultural Magazine" Miss E. F. Chawner writes: "I have seen it stated that Sugar-Birds build domed nests; but all the three species, Blue, Red-throated, and Yellow-winged, which went to nest here made no attempt at anything beyond the usual cup very daintily built. Of course, they may do differently in their native country; it has often been noticed how birds will adapt themselves and vary their custom under artificial conditions, but it is rather difficult to see why this particular change should be made. The actual cup is small and rather deep, and the foundations very firmly and tightly fastened to the boughs among which the nest is built, generally in a Cypress or similar evergreen."

The Principles of Hybrid Breeding.

By JAS. A. HARDIE (Galashiels).

A Scottish Fancier outlines his methods of trying for the rarer crosses.

IN writing of the very uncertain but attractive hobby of hybrid breeding I propose to outline as briefly as possible the methods I employ.

I must deal first with the manner of housing the prospective hybrid breeders. I have never had facilities for trying an outside aviary, though I would prefer that method to any other, but it would be erected as a series of small aviaries or pens under a common roof. My experience, extending over a number of years, has led me to believe that such an aviary would give better results than one where the birds all fly together, and would be infinitely preferable to an indoor aviary or cages.

I used for four years an indoor aviary which fitted across the end of an attic room, and was made simply with small wood standards and fine mesh wire netting. It was divided into three pens by wire netting divisions, along which broom and other branches were wired to form a small hedge for nesting purposes. The results from these pens were satisfactory, and occasionally almost sensational.

Sensible Cages.

I am now forced to use box breeding cages ranging from 30 to 48 inches in length. These cages are fitted with four doors to a cage, all in front, two being nesting or bolting doors, and two for general use. They have a two-inch rail in front, and are very handy. The perches, two in number, are kept fairly low, and, of course, the cage-bottoms are kept covered in the breeding season, usually with dried grass, which I shake up last thing at night, and find as good as anything for hiding eggs which may be dropped from perches, although that is a thing I am not greatly troubled with. My only offender in this way for a long time has been, strange to say, a Canary reared Redpoll hen which has nested twice yearly for the past five seasons. I supply, of course, sea sand, old mortar, and cuttlefish bone as required.

I will now discuss the birds to put up for hybrid breeding. "Many breeders, many ideas" is indeed applicable to hybrid breeding; some advocate hand or Canary-reared birds, some house-moulted, some longsided finches, and so on.

I always make a point of having all birds I think of trying as near their respective types and as richly coloured as possible, for I hold that if hybrids are reared there is a far greater chance of their being show specimens if bred from parents such as I have described.

I also try to get birds of the season, if possible, but am not a stickler on that point. I usually get more birds than I require, keep them for a month or two, pay particular attention to their peculiarities, and their adaptability to cage life, and then make a selection.

I find this method suits me best, and I rarely have a non-breeder. As I write, a Redpoll-Bullie pair are busy nesting for the fourth time, although I have cleared everything but the perches from the cage. Three eggs have been fertile, and both birds were caught last September.

Treatment Throughout the Year.

Having got the birds, they must be attended to if hybrids are to be expected the following season. I do not believe in feeding birds into condition just prior to the breeding season, but devote all my energies to keeping them in condition from catching right on.

I always collect in autumn as much wild food and seeds as will keep the birds going right into the next season. The result is the birds need no prompting or special dieting, they are always ready when wanted, and often before.

The wild seeds I store are mainly "Queen of the Meadow," knapweed, nettle, and dock, with rowan and privet berries for the Bullies, which also get an occasional feed of heather tops. I usually manage also to get a good sample of screenings from the thresher.

As a rule I cage off my pairs as early as I can. They are wintered in the breeding cages, which have then only two perches, one at either end, an encouragement to exercise.

About the beginning of April I prepare each cage, and place in each a box hung on the end, slightly higher than the perches. The nest boxes are the same as those used on the end of the Scotch type of wire breeding cage, but I take the small end door off and place a felt nest in. The hens take to those without any trouble, and Bullie hens seem very partial to them.

In the spring my main food plant is, of course, the dandelion, and I may state that I never have much hope of birds breeding that cannot be brought to the scratch during dandelion time. I keep a look-out for the early leaves, and, after a very careful start, supply them freely, roots and all, until the seed heads are ready; then the heads are supplied in hundreds daily, the fluffy part being first cut off to prevent litter. This is a laborious job, but it is nothing to the man who means hybrids, and I know of no better way.

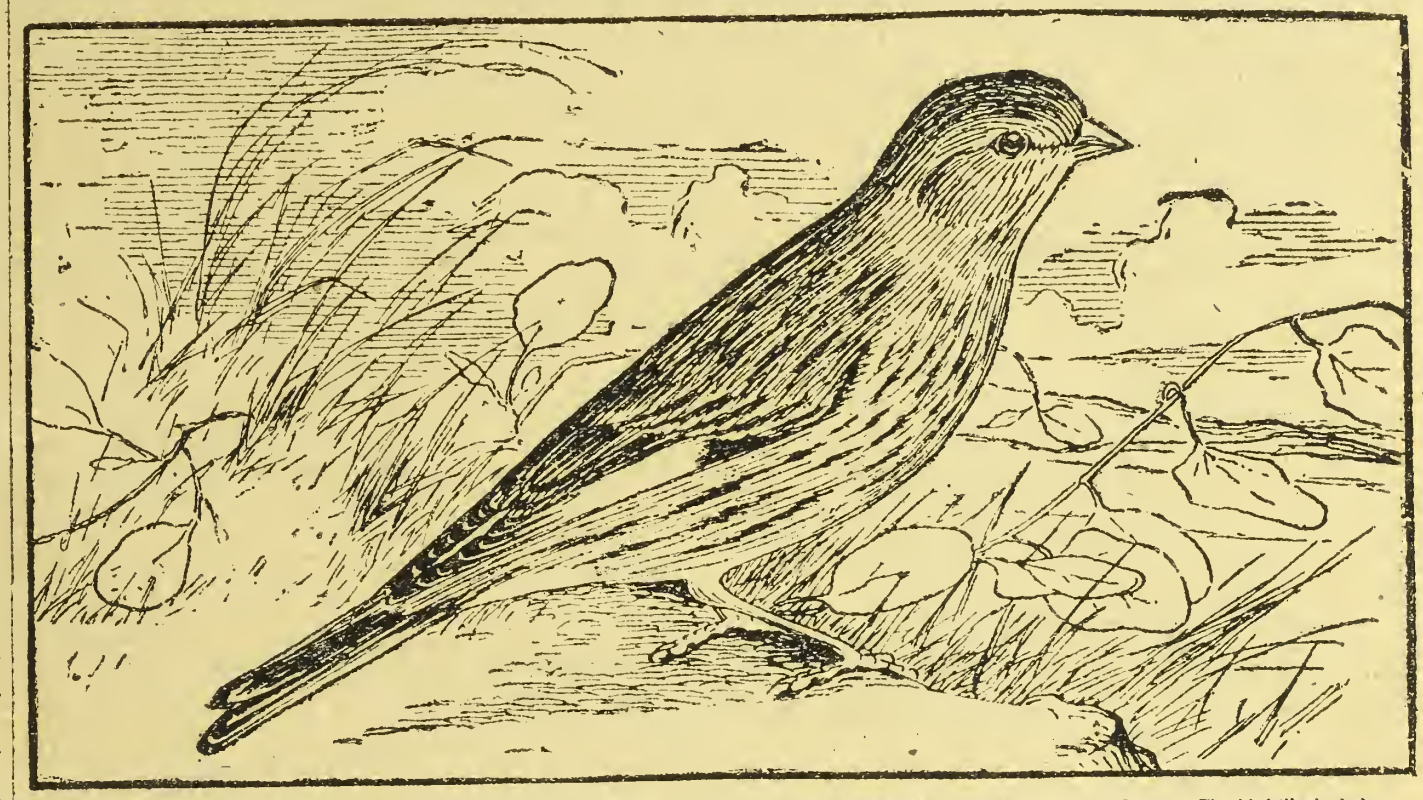
The dandelion is followed by many other seeds, the birds just now taking a large amount of sorrel. If a Chaffinch, Bramble, or Bunting is being tried, then they are supplied with scoured gentles, greenfly, etc.

I gather the latter according to a hint given in CAGE BIRDS some time since by Miss Reeves, of Wateringbary. A bucket or pail is thoroughly wetted inside, and held under a clump of nettles or other weeds, which are then gently beaten with a stick, and as a result live food can be taken from the pail in handfuls.

Treated as above, I find no difficulty in bringing the pairs into high condition, and it is here that for years I have parted company with the ideas of the majority of hybrid breeders. As soon as I see a given pair right up to the "can't help it" point, then I introduce a cock of the same species as the hen I am trying. He is put into a roomy cage in full view of and close to the hen; if a cock Redpoll, he is as often as not allowed to fly about the room. The result is invariably the same, copulation takes place at once, and the results as far as fertile eggs are concerned are quite satisfactory.

I mainly try what are usually termed rare crosses, but as a rule am let down by Canary hens, none of which I have been able to educate to feed, to a serviceable extent at least, on greenfly or other live food, and I do not find that the Greenfinch hen is much more dependable, indoors at least.

Bits of Bad Luck.



By the methods I have outlined I was successful in rearing in 1915 one Chaffinch-Greenfinch hybrid, which was lost at eight weeks old through my being unexpectedly called away from home owing to the illness of one of my boys. I was told on returning that "yon funny bird is no weel." It was not, and died five days afterwards. The same Chaffinch cock mated that season eight times successively with a Bullfinch hen when she was allowed into his pen, but killed her next day.

I may here state that although, after cl[ose] examination, I decided against the alleg[ed] Chaffinch-Bullfinch exhibited four or five year[s] ago at the Scottish National, I believe this cross can and will be bred, for every action of the two species leading up to and during copulation is almost similar.

Again, in 1914 I bred the Chaffinch Greenfinch cross, having one seven days old (a critical time as a rule with hybrids), and three in the next nest which died at three days old. These were starved through a Yellow Bunting hen, caught in February that year, laying and sitting in the same nest as the Greenie hen, and, as soon as the Greenie came off to feed, sidling on to the young. On going to the nest the Greenie could not get the young fed, with the result stated.

This Bunting hen was paired to a Bramb[l]ing, also February caught. She built, laid, and sat twice, but, although copulation took place frequently, all the eggs were unfertile. These crosses were tried for in the pens previously mentioned.

In conclusion I would say to young hybrid breeders, give great attention to the articles, replies to queries, etc., in CAGE BIRDS, read all the literature procurable on the subject; just take from them what you find suitable to your own ideas and circumstances; pay every attention to your birds all through the season; never mind inevitable disappointments; just carry on.

The Linnet is used in the production of many beautiful Hybrids; it pairs readily with other British Finches or with the Canary. The bird illustrated won 1st prize at Watford Show for Mr. A. H. Taylor.

How Novices May Score in Hybrid Breeding.

By J. G. WESTGATE, Hale.

IT is no use arguing with a bird fancier on the matter of which kind of bird is best to keep; the particular variety he himself happens to have he deems superior to all others, and there the matter ends.

Now Canary rearing is more or less a straight affair. Given healthy stock, careful attention, and ordinary luck, one may reasonably count on a fairly successful result, but with Mule breeding it is often very different.

I have in mind at the moment Linnet muling and Goldfinch muling. You may get a steady house-moulted Britisher, and the best Sib-bred Canary hen, you may give them every care and attention, and yet nothing may come of it.

Another time you will have in your cages a recently caught Goldfinch or Linnet, and just a very ordinary Canary hen; you don't think much of either of them, so you let them get along on their own, and the unexpected happens, and you have a fine nest of mules.

And so it goes on; the experienced breeder reports "nothing doing," and the novice comes out on top, with either two or four-pointed mules, or even a clear yellow at the first attempt, and this uncertainty is the charm of mule breeding.

I once had a clear yellow Norwich hen, which I had used as a feeder. I had marked this hen down to go with my next lot of surplus stock to our local dealer, until one evening I called upon a friend who told me he had a bird which a neighbour leaving the district had given him. I had a look at it, and found it the tamest Linnet I have ever seen to this day. It must have been of great age; you could take it from the perch and put it back again, and never a flutter.

I thought, what a mate for my old feeder, and the absurdity of the thing tickled me so that I asked my friend if he would mind lending it to me for a week or two. He immediately replied "Certainly. Take it for ever if you will," but I only borrowed it.

When this Linnet was introduced to his future "donah," he never even looked at her, but sensibly preferred the seed-box.

At the end of a week, though she had thrashed him several times, he still seemed to take not the slightest notice of her, but had a tired want-to-get-away-from-her look, so as his thoughts appeared evidently to be on other matters, I returned him to my friend with a note of thanks.

The hen commenced to lay the following morning, and I let her sit the eggs as they were laid, a proceeding I never adopt in the ordinary way, but I thought it would keep her quiet, and out of mischief. Judge of my surprise, about thirteen days later, to hear the familiar chirping of young birds, I was astounded, yet very pleased, and immediately put her on the usual diet, and the result was four of the finest Linnet-mules I have ever seen. I would have laid 100 to 1 against anything being hatched, but, there you are.

My experiences with Goldfinches began before I could distinguish hens from cocks. I bought, at different times, several from stalls in the bird market; some lived, some died; if they lived they were certain to be hens. I then sent for three "picked cocks" from a catcher, and one of these actually was a cock. I kept it about two years, but had no results from pairing it to two Canary hens.

I then accidentally met a catcher in a Northern town who was taking his catch to the dealer. This was my opportunity, so I suggested "rest and nourishment," and while he nourished, I looked through his long baskets. He had almost every kind of our local birds, including lots of young ones, and I got him to pick me out a greypate cock. The one he chose was a thick-headed, stumpy bird with no tail, but he said it would moult out a stormer, and it did.

I paired this Goldfinch for several seasons with varying results, once I reared a variegated mule, but all the others were ordinary dark ones. Young mules hatch out sooner, are on the perches sooner, and are quicker, and more hardy than young Canaries.

The Song of the Virginian Cardinal.

A Musical Quail.

Sir,—With reference to my note in your issue of July 29 on the doubtful stanza which I provisionally credited to the Virginian Cardinals, I have now definitely ascertained that the notes in question proceed from the cock of my pair of common Quail. I had no idea before that these birds were so musically inclined; the notes are distinctly musical, and pleasing to the ear.

What confused me, and led me to wrongly ascribe these notes to the Cardinals, is the fact that the song is often terminated by "churring" notes very similar to those produced by the Cardinals.

Gerald E. Rattigan.

Sir,—In your issue of July 29, Mr. Gerald E. Rattigan (under the heading of The Song of the Virginian Cardinal) asks about the song of the common Quail. I have kept a considerable number of the Common or Egyptian Quails, and although when tame they make delightful pets, and are very pretty in a garden aviary, or indeed indoors, they certainly cannot boast of much song. They make a pretty little chirping like young chickens, but the call note or song of the male is more quaint than pretty; it sounds like pow-pou, pow-pou, pow-pou, with the accent on the last part of the word, uttered with a guttural note; it reminds one of a cat with a very bad cold trying to mew; they sometimes commence with two or three shriller notes such as chew chew.

How Two Canaries Learned to Talk.

A Grandfather's Tale of Forty Years Ago,

Sir,—My grandfather bred a nest of Canaries from a German cock and Norwich hen which produced three young birds. Of these he gave his landlady one and his sister one. The one which his landlady had never sang, but one day Grandma said to Grandfather, "The Canary you gave the landlady talks like her Parrakeet," which said, "Get up, Mary," "Three cheers for Victoria," and several other words. Grandfather at first did not believe it, but, one day the landlady asked Grandfather to mind the bird while she went on a holiday, and then, to his great surprise, when he went to feed the birds, he heard the Canary repeat the words used by the Parrakeet. He then found that when the Canary tried to sing, the Parrot would squawk, and frighten him off singing, so he had to retaliate by imitating the Parrot, and thus he never sang. The other Canary, which Grandfather gave to his sister, strange to say, also had for a companion a Parrakeet, which could talk. Now this Canary could sing very well, but he also learnt many words from the Parrakeet, and spoke them quite distinctly. For forty-five years Grandfather had bred Canaries and Mules, but never two like them.

House Sparrow, Tree Sparrow or Hybrid?

Sir,—Re your Editorial Note under this heading, in which you state that the bird in question is, or was, a House Sparrow, I regret that I cannot agree with your decision. The bird corresponded in detail to the description given in standard books on British birds, even to its methods of locomotion, which, to quote an old writer, R. L. Wallace, "are by no means dignified," owing to their having short legs. The owner of this bird will probably have noticed that when approached closely it would scuffle round the cage bottom on its stomach, more like a mouse than a bird. As recently as February last I purchased two specimens precisely similar to this one; one died, from exhaustion, I should imagine, from dashing about its cage; the other I exhibited at a table show of sixty British birds at the Highgate and Hampstead Society. The judge, in the course of his remarks upon the birds, conclusively settled any doubts we had as to its identity. He also described the general habits of the bird, which coincide with several books I have read on British birds. The exhibitors at our recent show remembered the resemblance of this departed bird to the one I exhibited, and, incidentally, released after the show mentioned.

Perhaps some others of your numerous readers have had experiences with Sparrows and could give some advice on feeding them, as they seem very difficult to keep in captivity, although so common. I and several others adhere to our opinion that the bird in question is a Tree Sparrow.

F. C. Knight.

[We are publishing the above letter so as to be perfectly fair, but we have no intention of opening a discussion as to the identity of this particular bird, for we do not expect anyone to revoke his own decision, once it has been given. The wing of the dead bird is at our office for anyone to see, or we will send it by post on the promise of its return. A Tree Sparrow has two white bars on the wing. This bird had one. —Editor, Cage Birds.]

To Fanciers Near Herne Bay.

Sir,—Having been called to the Colours under the Derby Groups, and stationed at Herne Bay, I should like to meet any bird fanciers living this way, to have a little birdy talk, so I thought you might be so kind as to mention this in Cage Birds. I am still keeping my stock till after the moult to see how things turn out, as I shall be very sorry to have to dispose of them after getting together a good strain. I have left them in the care of my wife for a time, but I hope this dreadful war will soon be over, so that I may be able to get back again with the birds and family. I am training here, in the 4th Hants, for a time, and my address is No. 5377, Pte. A. Moorman, "B" Company, 4th Hants, 84th Provl. Battn., Herne Bay.

A Late Blackbird's Nest in the Trenches.

Sir,—Being interested in birds and their habits I should like to know if the following is anything out of the common. On the morning of July 30 I found a nest containing one Blackbird egg, and on going there in the afternoon, I saw there were two eggs in the nest. Making a rough calculation, I find that the eggs will be due to hatch about the 15th or 16th of August, which, to my own mind, is rather late—a lot later than I have ever known before. The nest is in one of our trenches, and there are troops passing it all day long. I wish Cage Birds every success.

Pte. Hy. Hall.

[The middle of August is very late for the hatching of young Blackbirds, but so late a date is not entirely unknown.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

Wake Up, Newcastle C.B.S.

Sir,—In answer to the Secretary of the Newcastle C.B.S., I may say I have done my share, and would do it again, to help any society that I have an interest in. Yes, I pose as a champion; I do not like to stick in the novices after keeping birds for many years—I like to be climbing the ladder amongst other fanciers. I will not require to look at the books when the Secretary states that only nine members paid their subs. as yet. I also like to be sociable, and encourage fanciers, and I do not belong to any clique. As regards the remuneration he gets for his work, I do not grudge him it at all

I was at the meeting when the Secretary was elected, and he is quite right in what he says, but he does not mention that later, when he was wanting to keep the position, he let someone else take it for the two show days. I am very sorry he has had the "donkey work." I never dealt in donkeys—very stupid animals, I hear. Could the Secretary tell us why he has not acted up to Rules 5 and 6, and had his meetings, and also taken 2s. 6d. subs. along with entries when he seems so anxious to enforce rules? No wonder he has the new complaint—the Cage Bird Society "shock," not bird fever; it must be an awful complaint. I hope by now he has nicely recuperated after his holiday in Cumberland.

I do not wish to interfere with his duties as secretary, nor to dictate to him; it is the welfare of the society I am looking after, or at least thinking about, nor do I want his job, but surely we are rather late in putting matters right, or in making a start. We seem to have been caught napping, but we have awakened to the situation, and have seen our folly when perhaps too late; but they say better late than never, so we must "wait and see."

Anxious.

[We have received a long letter over the nom de plume of "Observer" which consists entirely of personal matter. We cannot make Cage Birds the medium of personal attacks while shielding the identity of those who make them.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

Sir,—Little or no experience was the only conclusion I came to after reading "Sub Rosa's" first contribution, and his second edition confirms it. By careful manipulation, selection, and inbreeding, you could almost put the head where the tail ought to be, and, as regards the head not being improved in size by such a method, I would merely say, if at any time he is coming our way (Devonport), I shall be delighted, and shall appreciate the opportunity of proving the contrary.

Wait and See.

Sir,—In a footnote attached to Mr. Crawhall's letter on "Inbreeding," you say "knowledge disseminated becomes of value to all." Such is obvious, unless it be that little knowledge (sometimes called learning), which is a dangerous thing. My experience of the science of pedigree breeding, or inbreeding, which has extended over a period of 40 years amongst several kinds of live stock, has led me to the conclusion that if it were practised more generally and more systematically, it would bring a thousandfold more enjoyment into the hobby with which the breeder might have identified himself.

In the first place, to inbreed successfully you must practise consistency to the letter. Without prejudice, I venture to wonder how many cage bird breeders do that. Possibly more than I opine; possibly fewer. Be that as it may, without it a breeder will never succeed in the science—for it is, after all, a science—of pedigree breeding.

In the next place he will have to expend a great amount of thought upon his work. Inbreeding is not merely the putting of two related birds together. That would be absurd—as absurd in some cases as it is to run about for change of blood, without any knowledge of the source from which that blood is obtained, or in utter ignorance of the idiosyncracies of the strain of birds from which you are taking that change.

We must remember that the same principle which is held to stamp in good points can also stamp in bad ones. I have proved it. But in seeking a change of blood breeders very often seek and obtain trouble. Sometimes it hits all right, but more frequently the reverse; and when it does hit right it is more than likely that the outcross possessed at least some of the same blood as yours, and you did not know it.

I once bred a cup winner from an outcross male—the first time—and I wondered, for my stock was low and I had neglected it for a while. It was not till a long time afterwards that I discovered that the cup winner's sire was bred almost in line direct from the same blood as my female. Then I knew. So you see, while I am insisting on consistency, I was inconsistent but lucky. That is why, knowing the hazards, I say it is better to be consistent. I have inbred with all relationships, but always with healthy stock; always with the best to the best that I possessed; and I took care not to be tempted to part with my best.

It is the biggest mistake in the world to say: "I will part with this cock, the figure offered is big; or I will part with this hen, the figure offered is better, and I have others of the same nests, so can go on smiling!" You cannot! The best are the best, and to reach the top by inbreeding (or indeed by any other plan) and keep there, you must keep and breed from your best. Life is too short to be frittered away in tedious experiments on improving bad points by the counteracting influence of good points, when you might have had, if you had not coveted the cash, the good points both ways.

I have bred with perhaps the greatest success from brother and sister; yes, and brother and sister bred from father and daughter. True, I have had success from father and daughter, mother and son, etc., but I have been most successful with brother and sister. And here let me say there are idiosyncracies even in stock thus inbred. The fact is, you want to get to understand your stock. Even with inbred stock, the pairings do not always hit as you would wish. I have bred with two brothers paired to two sisters—separately, of course. The one pair bred me winners, and the other the reverse—all inbred, as you see. I crossed them over, and got just the reverse result—winners from the ones that bred me losers, and losers from the ones that bred me winners. And so it is.

Someone says: "The same thing that occurs in indiscriminate pairing!" Possibly so. But there is just this difference which escapes you. Try the progeny from the haphazard; and if you go haphazard again, what then? Even if you succeed—even if you do—whose handiwork is it, yours or somebody else's? Get Mr. C. A. House's delightful articles and read them. Read his articles on inbreeding. They will serve as food for reflection, and if you give them the chance will bring grist to the mill.

I could write long and (to me) pleasantly on this topic, but the Editor probably will not want to fill his columns with the song of a possibly out-of-date chap such as I am content, now, to consider myself. But this I know—an ounce of experience gained in the pleasant pursuit of knowledge, is worth a ton of theory. To inbreed successfully you must inbreed consistently, and—you must use your brains.

Invicta.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "Sub Rosa," has the advantage of me in that he has tried inbreeding on a small scale, whereas I am only at the beginning of my experiments. I say on a small scale, because I think he stopped when he ought to have gone on. I am now referring to the time when he bred three winners in one nest; if he had selected one or two of the best youngsters from his winners, and paired them to their father, he would have stamped that father's likeness into the second generation, and then, if he had continued the process to a third, he would have got a larger proportion still of birds resembling their parent.

Of course, there is always the proviso that he had healthy stock with which to operate. There are contradictions in his letter which I will pass over lightly, because I want to carry on this correspondence in a friendly spirit, that we may each learn from the other's experiences, and, incidentally, may perhaps help others in the Fancy who are trying to obtain a surer way to breed exhibition specimens than the old haphazard method of selection from face value.

I think there is one point your correspondent makes clear in his letter, and that is that faults can be perpetuated without having recourse to inbreeding. If affections of the eye can be transmitted to the fifth generation, even of unrelated stock, how careful breeders ought to be to have perfectly healthy birds before they attempt to inbreed. Yet I am afraid your correspondent would have blamed inbreeding for perpetuating this fault had he done it in the least degree, and this shows that we must enter the consideration of the question with open minds, not giving it the entire credit for anything good may arise in the stock, nor yet blaming it entirely for any untoward incident that may occur. It is full of possibilities, yet it must not be entered on lightly, nor without being aware of the possible dangers there may be in it.

Since my last letter I have been honoured with a private correspondence from your original contributor, "Bee Jay." I have his permission to give your readers some of his experiences in other branches of live stock breeding. He has been most interested in both dog and pigeon breeding for exhibition, and I will give you an extract from one of his letters re a certain breed of dog. He says: "Looking over the pedigree of a famous dog, I noticed that he was tremendously inbred; he was the son of a bitch which had been got by putting a daughter to a father, granddaughter to grandfather, and then again a great-granddaughter to a great-grandfather." He says, further on, speaking of another breeder of dogs: "I had a look at his stud book, and found that all his dogs were inbred in this manner, and he assured me that this was the only way to 'stamp the name on the blade.' This fancier had a large number of dogs, and never kept a bad one; in fact, he seldom got a bad one."

I could go on giving you extracts, but they are all to the same end. Of course, I know that dogs, pigeons, cows, etc., are not Canaries, but my question has not yet received an answer. It was: If done successfully in other branches of live stock, why should it not also be a success in Canary breeding? I feel confident there are great possibilities in the system, and only ask that it be given a fair trial, without prejudice, and without expecting too much of it.

With reference to the point your correspondent raises that I have not proved that large heads can be produced by inbreeding, I did not intend to convey the meaning that they could be produced by this method. The method, to be of any practical value at all, assumes that you start with good stock, possessing certain desirable properties, be it size, good heads, type, feather, or any other desideratum, and fix them in the progeny. By breeding back to each original ancestor for three or four generations, and crossing the progeny thus obtained, you have a simple and sure method of fixing in the good points which by promiscuous mating you are apt to lose.

MY FAVOURITE BRITISH FINCH, AND HOW I KEEP IT.

Some Opinions of Our Readers Given in Competition for Our Weekly Prize of Half-a-Guinea,

The Goldfinch Heads the Poll.

MY favourite bird is the Goldfinch. I think it is the most charming of all Finches. This is how I keep them. I have a wooden cage 16ins. in length, 10ins. high, and 8ins. wide, with a seed drawer fitted in the front, and I hang the cage on the wall in the living room just under the gas, but when the weather is warm I put it outside. I give him a bath every morning, change his drinking water twice a day, and every day I give him a piece of green food, chiefly dandelion. The seeds I find he does best on are three parts teasel, two parts canary, half a part of linseed, and quarter part of charlock and summer rape. On this mixture he keeps in good song and colour. I always keep about one inch of sand on the bottom of the cage, and I clean him out once a week, and scrape the perches at the same time.

RALPH CHURCH.

Its Cage and Its Menu.

THE Goldfinch is my first favourite of the British Finches. He so soon settles down to cage life, and his attractive colouring, docile manners, and cheery song make him a prime favourite. He is always merry and bright when in good health, but soon goes to the happy hunting grounds if he does not receive proper care when caged.

The cage is of much importance, and should allow the bird a fly from perch to perch, not merely a hop. A captive bird must have wing exercise; exercise is essential to good health. A good box type cage is the proper kind, with door arranged so that a bath can be hung on the outside. Fancy brass cages, with pretty stained glass arrangements, are the essence of cruelty, and should not be used for British Finches, or any others for that matter.

Feeding is a much-debated subject to write or advise upon, as there are no hard and fast rules to ensure success, but my method, I think, compares well with others that I have tried; at least, I am well satisfied.

My stock mixture is made up by measure; two parts canary, two teazel, one hemp, and quarter-part niger. I keep the seed box full of this mixture, and give as extras, maw, dandelion, gold of pleasure, and cornflower seeds. A small spoonful of egg food is relished once a week.

These tit-bits should be given in small quantities at a time, or sick birds will result, and harm, instead of good, be done. When green food is procurable it should be in preference to the extras mentioned. The Goldies chosen speciality is the large thistle, but there is a large selection of weeds to select from, including groundsel, shepherd's purse, plantain, dandelion, watercress, chickweed, lettuce, etc.; any and all are good, and should be offered when procurable.

In winter a bit of sweet apple is acceptable. On no account offer green food if frosted, or death will result.

The bath does not receive so much attention from some keepers of birds as it should. Water is the finest conditioner that it is possible to procure, and it is very cheap; its cheapness, perhaps, goes against it. The bath should be offered on fine days, not only when it is summer time, but during the whole year round. You cannot make a bird bathe, so when you see him in the water you can depend he is enjoying himself.

So treated, the Goldfinch is a gem of beauty for colouring, and a credit to the keeper of our favourite Finch.

R. BAINES.

A Half-day in the Country.

THE prize question this week is a problem to the lover of hardbills, but brought face to face with the question "What is your favourite British Finch?" I have to admit a preference for the Goldfinch as top dog. Both from a utility point of view and as a musician he is hard to beat.

This is my half holiday and I am off with a couple of Finches under my arm and CAGE BIRDS in my pocket to enjoy to the full the only leisure hours I have in all the week. The sun is shining in all its glory, and the sweet scent of new-mown hay is in the air. I am lying under the shelter of a hawthorn hedge; my two Finches are set up about 15 yards apart, and are testing their vocal powers to their utmost in an endeavour to show their owner how much they appreciate their outing.

On my left, reaching up to the sky line, is a hill side of purple heather, while to the right is a long plantation of birch and elder trees, ending in a stretch of arable country with its hay ricks and ripening corn blending with turnip fields and pasture land, and the farmsteads nestling in the shelter nooks.

What's that? Down goes my CAGE BIRDS. A Goldfinch is passing over head, and my Finches are challenging him. He swirls around, their music, like bugle calls, keeping him in its spell. He finds he is no match for my two favourites, and down he comes to have a chat with them through the bars of their cages, first one, then the other.

I have never heard a wild Goldie to equal either of the two Finches I have just now. They are both Britishers, their blazes like richest carmine, their tan real rich chocolate, and their whites are like foreigners, and their feathers like silk, shining with bloom.

Now a Hawk has passed over our heads; the wild Finch dives into the thick of the hedge, and my own Finches sink dumb. I hasten to get my favourites wrapped up for the return journey, and with an appetite like a hungry hunter I start for home, where, after tea, I will supper up my birds and devour the rest of CAGE BIRDS to the music of my hen Canaries giving their hungry youngsters their last feed for the night. Thus ends one of the pleasantest leisures any person could wish to have.

My method of feeding is, as stock food, best canary seed, and every day a small teaspoonful of the following:—Dandelion, hemp, teazel, inga, and maw. Besides this I give all the wild seeds it is possible to procure, beginning in the early spring with the first buds on the hedges and trees, then the dandelion leaf, followed by the seeding heads. By this time the sorrel, sow thistle, shepherd's purse, groundsel, plantain, etc., then lastly, hard heads and big thistle, of which I lay in a supply for the winter and early spring.

The daily bath puts the finishing touch, and to prove the condition of my two Finches I have some fine big variegated and dark mules from the one, and a fine Goldie-Bullie hybrid from the other, and they are in mad form yet.

My cages are old soap boxes about 3ft. 6in. long by 18ins. wide and 18ins. deep; they cost 4d. each; I use river sand for the cage bottoms, and never have any trouble with red mite. Twice a year they get a good lime wash.

I have over thirty young Canaries, seven lovely Goldie mules, a Goldie-Bullie hybrid, and plans already laid for what I will try next year. I attribute my success entirely to CAGE BIRDS, and my advice to the novice and to the experienced fancier as well is: Never miss a single issue, or you are sure to miss some wrinkle worth knowing.

WM. LAIDLAW.

Lovers of the Linnet.

MY choice of a favourite came to me with my liking for birds. Many years ago, when only a boy of about eight, I bought my first Linnet. After making a cage out of a box, my brother and I went to the bird dealers for a bird with threepence we had saved, and the man asked me if I wanted a green one or a brown one. I thought he was making fun of me, and, not liking the sound of "green," I said "brown." I don't think it was his fault, but he gave me a very nice cock.

The song of the Linnet is not a question of price, for as I write I am cheered by the sweet song of one deep in moult, and not quite tame, whose price was the same as dozens of others I have had through my hands, that is, sixpence.

I cage my Linnets in Sunlight Soap boxes or Watson's Matchless Cleanser boxes, with punched bar fronts, but, now these latter are dear, I use ½in. wood bars, top and middle, a 2in. belt to hold the fountains, and a ¾in. sand tray front, with a sand tray made out of the lid; this I keep covered with sharp grit, and about a tablespoonful of seed from the threshing machine twice a week.

In the fountain is a mixture of Spanish canary seed, rape seed, and an extra each day consisting of linseed one day, maw the next, followed by hemp, teasle, niger, lettuce, or turnip.

When the wild food is to be had, they nearly live on this. Properly treated, it is astonishing how long Linnets will live, and a novice who only knows the A B C of bird-keeping can breed Mules from them.

Undoubtedly the keeping of Linnets demands more attention on the part of their owner than does the keeping of Canaries; it is a much more practical affair. When you go for a walk you pick groundsel, dandelion, and shepherd's purse for your Linnet, and to see them start on it before you have quite fastened it to the wires is a pleasure.

The fancier of Linnets always has plenty to do that will fill his spare moments, yet I would not have it supposed that this is a drawback; on the contrary, I think that those who are devoted to their birds will agree with me that therein lies its greatest charm.

A. BURROWS.

Cheap to Buy and Easy to Keep.

OF all our Finches the Linnet, to my mind, stands first. I have kept various kinds of British birds at one time or another, and find the Linnet tops them all both for song and as a pet, being such an intelligent little fellow.

It is best to buy him as a brancher, then you stand a better chance of training him to your liking. Another thing which is a big consideration is the very small cost of this bird, for he may be purchased for anything from 6d. to 2s. 6d., a very reasonable price indeed for such a good songster. Of course, you can pay much more for a contest singer, but it has had to be trained, hence its cost.

The Linnet, too, is a very free muler; he will mate and breed readily with a hen Canary, providing he is in breeding condition, and is one of the best of fathers to his children.

The Linnet does not take so much catering for as some of our Finches. If your bird is a fresh-caught one you should soak a bit of summer rape until it is ready for sprouting, and mix with it a little crushed hemp. Then have in the seed box its ordinary seed mixture, of which the bird will eat more every day, and the soaked seed can be gradually withdrawn. A good supply of wild seeds should be given, such as shepherd's purse, groundsel, chickweed, seeding grass, etc.

When I get my Linnets nicely steady, and on the hard seed, the mixture I give them is the following:—Canary three parts, teazle two parts, and one part each of summer rape, charlock, and linseed.

If the weather is very severe in the winter, or even if a bird is stuck in the moult, I find that adding one part hemp to the stock mixture works wonders. As a tit-bit or change I give a teaspoonful of a mixture of niger and maw, and I always give plenty of wild seeds as they come in season.

If a difficulty arises in procuring green food a good substitute is rape seedlings, but watch that it does not go rancid, or you will lose your birds. After the moult I give plenty of good sound hemp; this helps to bring them in condition, and on alternate days I give a teaspoonful of the following mixture:—Two parts each of gold of pleasure, mustard, niger, sesame, and thistle, one part each of dandelion, maw, cornflower, and lettuce.

The above mixture is the finest refresher in the world for Linnets, and is readily eaten, and you will note the difference in your birds when they have been treated as advised for a short time. In conclusion, I may say that if these few notes are carried out your Linnets will never look back, but will give you the greatest of pleasure all the year round.

HAROLD FREEMAN.

In Praise of the Redpoll.

AS the owner of several kinds of Finches I find it difficult to name one as my favourite, but I think, on consideration, that I like the Redpoll as well as any, but the Bramblefinch and Greenfinch are close up in my estimation.

As an intelligent and entertaining pet the Redpoll is hard to beat, and a good one can do very well on the show bench, which is some consideration. Moreover, he does not, as a rule, contract that ungrateful habit of the Goldfinch and Bullfinch, etc., of turning up his toes from no apparent cause.

As a bird for the beginner I should call him the ideal, as he is so very easy to feed, and, being a free bather, he is also of a clean and smart appearance.

With regard to feeding and general management, my remarks apply to all my British birds. When purchased as fresh-caught specimens I turn the birds into as large a cage as possible, putting each fresh bird with an old-caged one, and I find that in a very short time the new arrival becomes as steady as the old one.

For the first few weeks I give soaked rape and teazle on alternate days in very small quantities, also fresh green food appropriate to the species. Every fourth day I give a weak dose of Glauber salts to remedy any trouble due to overfeeding.

As a stock food I mix together one quart each of finest Spanish canary, teazle, and small red summer rape. This mixture is always before the birds, and I find that on it they keep healthy and in good condition.

"Mixed seed," as sold in shops, I regard as a medium for seed merchants for disposing of bad hemp, of which it contains always a liberal amount. I have cracked 30 seeds, and found all bad. Many a good Greenfinch has found its way to the dustbin through its fondness for hemp seed, and through the mistake of its owner in giving this mixed food.

I make a point of buying the best seeds separately, and mixing them as required. Good hemp is very useful as an extra, and almost all British birds will eat it. I also give occasionally, just a pinch to each bird of the following tit-bit mixture: Niger, maw, sesame, and linseed in equal parts. Last, but not least, I give regularly a teaspoonful per bird of a good wild seed mixture, containing almost every wild seed that a bird will eat.

Among other little preferences, I find that the Bramblefinch will not eat green food, but is very fond of a mealworm daily. The same applies to the Chaffinch, and, in my case, the Hawfinch. Greenfinches appear to be fond of anything—seedling lettuce, rats'-tails, grass heads, watercress, and especially half-ripened wheat. The Redpoll and Twite seem to like only lettuce, and little of that. They are the only two hardbills I have which will not eat safflower and sunflower, both of which I give freely during the moult and winter months. The bath I give on every favourable day.

F. C. KNIGHT.

The Value of the Redpoll as an Exhibition Bird.

MY favourite British Finch is the commonest of all Finches, the Lesser Redpoll. Being caught in large numbers it is easily obtained, although, as in all other varieties, outstanding birds are scarce, and while the price for ordinary specimens averages about sixpence each, outstanding specimens run into pounds.

Being a free breeder, it is invaluable as a hybrid breeder, and can be crossed with the following: Canary, Greenfinch, Siskin, Linnet, Goldfinch, Bullfinch, etc., the latter cross being most valuable, and able to hold its own in any class of Hybrids.

As an exhibition Finch, from a financial point of view, the Redpoll ranks first, for they are such general favourites that nearly every show of any size provides a class for them, and invariably gets full classes, which means to an exhibitor full prize money, and this can hardly be said of some other Finches.

It is very easy to keep. As a staple diet I feed on good Canary seed, giving periodically as tit-bits a little hemp, niger, teazle, and wild seeds in season. It is particularly fond of hardheads, which, in any country place, can be gathered in thousands, dried, and stored up for use in the moulting season.

Hardheads, along with the above-mentioned seeds, and some good colour feed, not forgetting the free use of the bath, will moult selected specimens into winners, and repay all the trouble. I have moulted hundreds in a similar manner with great success, having won at all the leading shows.

FINDLAY MCGILLIVRAY.

A Vote for the Bullfinch.

THE Bullfinch is a favourite of mine, although not so pretty in colours, and although he has not the song of a Goldfinch, he makes an admirable pet. He can, with patience, be taught to pipe quite nicely, and if kept with Canaries it is quite amusing to hear him try and imitate them.

He is a prettily-marked bird, with his red breast, white wing bars, and white rump. He requires plenty of exercise, so I always keep mine in a large cage. He must have a bath frequently, or his feet get dirty.

I feed on a staple of canary seed, and I give no hemp seed, as this, I think, is detrimental to their health. I give plenty of groundsel, dock, nettle, plantain, and sorrel. Also, when in season, I give raspberries, blackberries, privet, and ash keys from the ash trees. I find these help the colour immensely when moulting. The hens are valuable for hybridising. I usually catch my own Bullfinches, and would advise anyone who can do this to do likewise.

THE LINNET IN NATURE AND IN CAPTIVITY.

By T. G. ADDISON (Thornaby-on-Tees).

THE gorse is blooming with a luxuriance that gorse only can show, and the common is alive with golden glory. Birds move here and there, alarmed, as we make our way among the numerous threading tracks made by former wanderers and Nature's admirers. One moment; listen! from the green beneath the golden roof we hear:—

"The mirthful choirs with their full, open throats
Unto the joyful morn so strain their warbling notes,
That hills and valleys ring, and even the echoing air
Seems all composed of songs about them everywhere"

Chiefest of these songsters is the Linnet, or, as he is generally known in Scotland, the Lintie and Lintwhite. Burns, the peasant ploughman, whose tender heart was endeared to all that Nature offered him, was often solaced, when he felt sad, by the songs of the birds, and in one of these sad moments he says:—

"In vain to me the cowslips blaw;
In vain to me the violets spring;
In vain to me in glen or shaw,
The Mavis and the Lintwhite sing."

The Linnet's Many Names.

The bird is sometimes called the Greater Redpoll, the Rose Linnet, and the Grey or Brown Linnet, the names changing with the changes in the bird's colour. It is a sweet and gentle bird, of a very loving character, and shows, when in captivity, great affection for those who tend it.

In the early morning, while the gradually-opening flowers are yet wet with dew, and the gossamer threads are among the grass, the sweet song of the wild Linnet can be heard coming from the furze bushes laden with their golden butterfly-like blossoms. A little cloud comes over the blue sky, and pattering raindrops begin to fall; this is the signal for the Linnet to cease its song, but immediately the cloud has passed away it renews its song with redoubled vigour, as if rejoicing in the freshened air.

Could we linger there till evening, we should still hear the song of this bird. As a matter of fact, it is never silent, save in the almost universal silence of Nature at summer noon-tide. Even when the gorse has lost its flowers, and the shrubs have nothing to show except their long green boughs and black seed vessels, the Linnet still sings on. A gleam of sunshine from a blue sky in autumn wakens it again into song, as it does on a winter's day, though in the latter season the strain is weaker and more plaintive, and seems more in harmony with the melancholy tones of the wind which is now bringing down the leaves at every gust.

The Linnet lives in harmony and friendship with its fellows, claiming no little spot, like the Robin or Nightingale, as its own peculiar domain, but sharing the sun and shower, the flower and fruits, with any other birds that come near it. Like the Goldfinch, it feeds on the seeds of the thistle, ragworts, and other compound flowers which are so numerous in autumn. When hunting out this food it does not quarrel with its companions, as some birds do, but is merry and good-tempered, allowing them to satisfy their needs.

The Linnet builds among the furze or brambles, and makes its nest of moss and grass stalks, intermingled with wool, and lined with feathers and hairs. It is a most devoted mother, and will not leave its nest for a moment after its young are hatched.

Beautiful as birds are, few people are aware how clean they are in their habits. The Linnet delights to dabble in the clear stream, and has been said to be the cleanest of all birds.

The Linnet is my favourite cage bird, being very grateful for kindness, and most desirous of pleasing. His song appeals to me more than any other, its variety being wonderful, and even sickness does not put this tiny piper out, while the older he gets the better he sings.

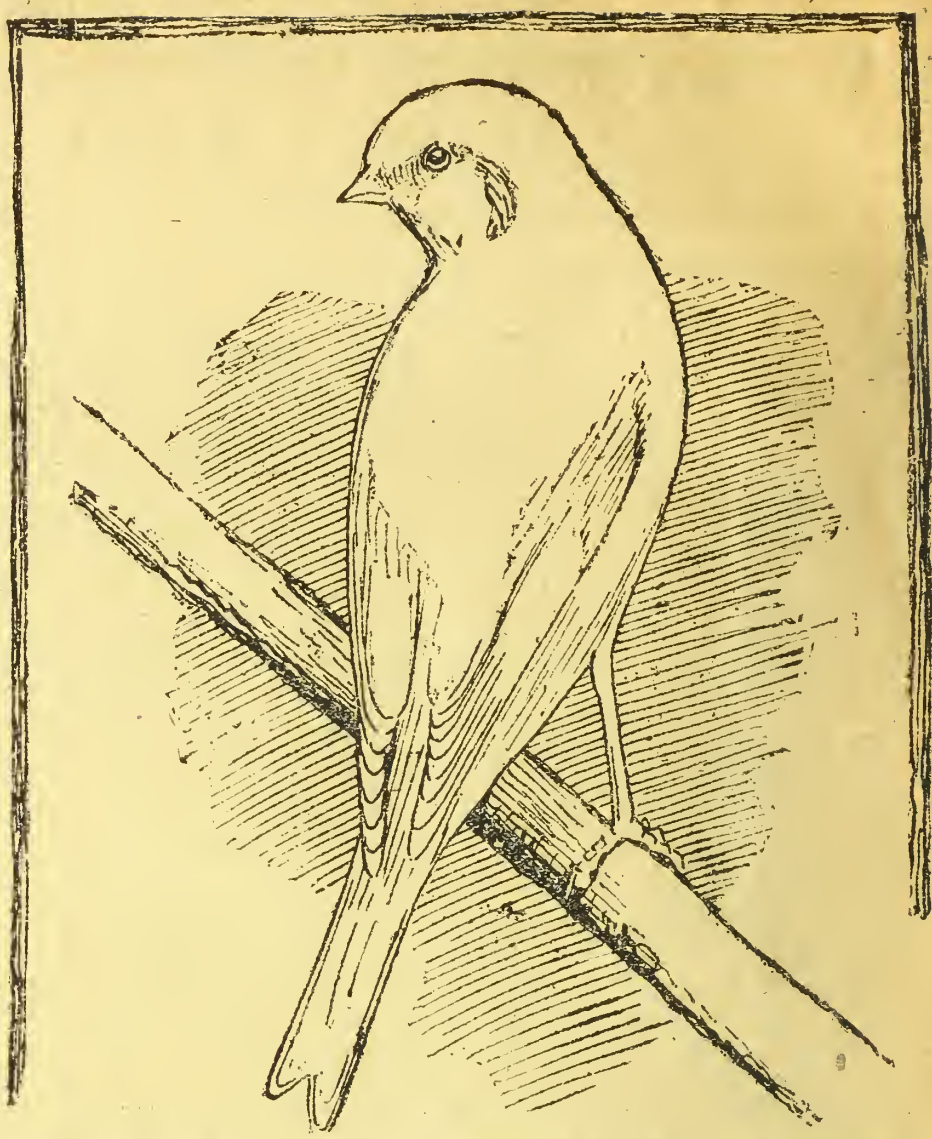
Its Cage and Its Keeping.

As regards his cage, give him plenty of room. The sight of a Linnet placed in a wretched prison house about eight inches high, six inches deep, and seven inches wide awakens in me feelings of sympathy. A box cage about a foot high, a foot deep, and eighteen inches wide, will provide him with room for sufficient activity.

Let your Linnet have a bath at least once a week. A common saucer will do very well for his bath, as, unlike the bullfinch, he is not a deep bather, preferring rather to sit in it, and to scatter the water with his wings and tail.

Keep the sand drawer well supplied with coarse sand, and, above all, look frequently to his water glass. His water should be changed twice a day, and no one who values his bird's health will neglect doing do.

If the white specks which denote red mite should make their appearance about the cage remove your Linnet into any spare cage you have. Brush the infested cage with turpentine, and, before replacing your bird therein, let it stand unused for two or three weeks.



A good stock mixture for Linnets is equal parts of canary seed and rape, together with a little teazle and inga, all mixed well together. A teaspoonful of good mixed wild seed, given twice a week, will be much appreciated, and will assist wonderfully in keeping the birds in excellent condition.

Wild seeds and green food should be given when obtainable. In the early part of the year young dandelion leaves and groundsel may be given, and as the season advances dandelion heads, plantain stalks, and thistle heads.

In conclusion, I would like to say a few words about the Linnet from a muling point of view. I have had remarkable success at breeding Linnet Mules, and attribute it to the condition of all my Linnets. These I obtain in October, when they can be had for a mere trifle.

I put them in separate cages, and feed them on the above stock mixture until the end of January. I now give a little dandelion seed daily, together with young dandelion leaves, which I grow in a hothouse.

As soon as dandelion heads are procurable I give each bird a couple twice daily, and to these I attribute in a very large measure my success; for, shortly, I find my Linnets' beaks assuming that blue-black colour which is such a sure sign of their forward condition, and never yet have I experienced any difficulty in pairing them to the hen Canaries. Insufficient attention to the Finches (whatever variety) is, in the writer's opinion, too often a cause of disappointment to the would-be Mule breeder.

Some Birds of the Garden.

HOW TO KEEP THEM IN CAPTIVITY.

By H. HOOD, East Harling.

THE birds of our gardens and fields are one of the joys of life to those who live, like myself, in the country. Amongst the first to begin nesting in our gardens are the brown Linnets. One scarcely sees them at all during winter, but they suddenly appear during April; the cocks with their rosy breasts singing their sweet song to their mates.

These are easy birds to handrear. I knew of one reared from nest, which lived in a small cage for 19 years. Soaked turnip seed, mixed with bread crumbly moist, is one of the best rearing foods.

Another way to rear is, when the young birds have got most of their feathers, to put them into a cage, and let the parents rear them. I have heard it said that the old birds poison them this way, but it is not so, and if those who think this will try this plan, they will prove it by succeeding in rearing them.

Keep the cage bottom perfectly clean, and, after the young have been caged for about three days, get a packet of mixed seeds, crush some of it well, mix with it some turnip seed, and put on floor of cage; also pull out the drawboard for two inches and put a little on. Repeat for three days, and if you watch you will very soon see the young birds picking it, also the old birds will pick up that outside the cage and give it to them.

Now make a little oblong box about half an inch in height, and put inside the cage next the front, with plenty of crushed seed in. In a fortnight from being caged you will find they will clear out the box, and then they may be taken away from the parents. After this, keep on with crushed seed for a time, and do not forget to give green food every day (chickweed is good) and they will get on well without trouble.

The most delightful bird of all is to my mind the Goldfinch; these are early breeders as well as late. I have seen young flying early in June this year. Many people fail with these.

In my young days we used to rear them successfully with the same food as the Linnets, but one can only get them from the dealers now, as there is protection in force in most countries. If those who buy would give some inga and green food every day with the stock seeds, the freshly caught bird would live all right; the green food is more important than anything else.

I prefer caught birds to hand-reared, as they seem to have more vim and life in them than the others, and they soon become tame. I think the reason is that in a wild state, after leaving the nest, they get some kind of natural food which we know nothing of, and which builds up their frames and strengthens them. They do not, of course, get this if hand-reared.

Easily Caught and Easily Tamed.

We get a few Bullfinches here during summer, but not many nests. They are handsome birds, but very destructive in the garden. We have three prunus trees here, and during the winter the Bullfinches find these out (I never can understand how they know, as the trees are all bare then, but some appear every winter on the same trees), and if not stopped they will quickly eat off all the buds.

These birds are so easily tamed if caught in winter that it is not worth the trouble to hand-rear them. At one time we had a Crystal Palace aviary in the conservatory with small foreign seed eaters. I have caught cock Bullfinches and put them at once into this cage with the others, and they have started eating hemp seed immediately, and in three days were having a bath and were quite at home, although the conservatory was always heated up to 60 degrees, a great contrast to the outside wintry conditions.

To catch Bullfinches a decoy bird in a trap cage is an advantage, but if the trap cage is baited with ripe privet berries, and placed where they come to feed, one can generally manage to get one without the decoy, especially if the weather is sharp. Then the rest is easy, as the caught bird can be used for a decoy after getting on to seed.

Put freshly caught birds in a cage about a foot square, with plenty of hemp and mixed seeds, put a piece of muslin over the wires for a day or two, and do not forget to give some gooseberry shoots every day, also privet berries. When on food, do not let them live entirely on hemp seed, as it is very often the cause of sores coming round the beak.

Two other handsome little birds are the Blue-Tit and Oxeye-Tit. I have never tried to rear them as they are both easily caught during winter, in a trap cage baited with beech nuts.

After catching, feed with beech nuts, bread crumbs, a meat bone, also maize, they are very fond of the latter, and it is very amusing to watch them pick up a maize seed, and hammer away until the soft part is extracted. The Blue-Tit seems to agree with other birds, but the Oxeye-Tit is very spiteful, and kills even its own kind, so it is best caged singly. I should think a cross between this bird and another British (if it were possible) would be very handsome.

I must not leave out the handsome Greenfinch, which is a great favourite with me. The cock in some cases is a very pretty bird, and a good songster. These are easily reared, or caught, and seem to do well on any kind of seed.

I brought a hen up from the nest, and in the following winter caught another hen. These were turned out in an aviary in the spring with a house-moulted cock Goldfinch. I fixed a Blackbird's nest in each of the two top corners, and these hens both laid three clutches of eggs, and set on them over a fortnight each time.

The Hybrids' Untimely End.

The eggs were all unfertile until the third nest. After sitting a week I tried the eggs in this lot, and found two full ones in one nest, all the rest clear. Thinking that if she hatched, she might not rear the young, I took these and placed in a brown Linnet's nest, taking two of her own out. The Linnet sat on these and hatched them out, but to my dismay, on going to look at them three days afterwards, I found them all gone, a cat or weasel had taken them during the night, and thus ended my attempt at Hybrid breeding.

I should like to say that I have taken CAGE BIRDS for over three years now, and it is the one thing of the week I look forward to on Friday evenings. To those who are sorrowing in this great calamity which is shaking the world, I would say get a bird or more if you can afford them, tend them, and talk to them, and you will find their interesting little ways and lively song will do just a little to bring some bright moments into your lives.

For myself, although not blessed with much of this world's goods (I am a single-handed gardener by profession) I find more pleasure and interest in my birds (and I have several) than many perhaps do in their lands and gold.

The Songster of the Night.

By F. BENT (Nottingham),

Telling how to Keep the Nightingale in Captivity, and expressing some unorthodox ideas of the bird and its habits in a wild state.

I HAVE been a bird lover and a bird fancier all my life. I have kept successfully most species of British birds that are kept for song or beauty, or for both combined. I have chosen the 'Gale, the king of songsters, without the shadow of a doubt, about which to give you my experiences. (I hope I may be forgiven for the use of "'Gale," but paper is dear, and very scarce, just now, and we are all now going in for war-time saving.)

Now, I understand from first-hand knowledge every phase of my subject, and if I happen to give any facts that are contrary to book knowledge, or popular belief, it is because I have proved them. I have studied 'Gales in their natural state from boyhood, and I have kept them in cage and aviary for more than twenty years; when no ants' eggs, dried flies, etc., were obtainable except from one's own gathering, and when no CAGE BIRDS existed, and when perhaps not half-a-dozen 'Gales were to be found caged in these islands.

So if I can help some novice to manage his birds a little better, or to gain any wrinkle about this glorious songster, I shall have done some good. No bird lover should have any secrets or keep anything hidden from his fellow fanciers if it is for the good of the bird or species.

A Necessary Preliminary.

To keep any bird successfully it is very necessary to study its habits in a state of Nature, to find what its food consists of at various seasons of the year, with what it feeds its young, its preference for certain nesting sites, etc. So for the greater part of a lifetime I have been an earnest student of wild bird life. I have had some very happy days (and nights, too) in trying to find out any fresh facts connected with "Philomel."

I have been out many, many April mornings in order to detect their first coming, to see if the cocks arrived first, or both sexes together. April 15 is the earliest date I have of the birds arriving in this North Midland district, Leicestershire and Nottinghamshire, and I have always found them in pairs, and looking up their old nesting sites. When they arrive on the Southern and Eastern coasts of England it may differ, but that I should like our birdy brethren of the South to verify.

Now, why they select certain parts of this country, to the neglect of other equally suitable situations, is as yet an unsolved problem. My theory is that an equal number yearly of 'Gales land on the south and east part of our coasts, and spread themselves over the country till they find suitable nesting sites. Very few we hear of going very far north of the Trent. If 'Gales increased yearly, like Starlings and Sparrows, then soon from Land's End to John o' Groat's the "tight little island" would soon be, for five weeks or so, full of the "most musical, most melancholy" song.

Critics differ about bird songs. Some seven years ago, in 1909, CAGE BIRDS had a "Most Popular Bird" Competition, with the following results:—1, Norwich Canary; 2, Yorkshire Canary; 3, Goldfinch; 4. Linnet; 5, Bullfinch; 6, Skylark; 7, Thrush; 8, Greenfinch; 9, Siskin; 10, Chaffinch; 11, Blackbird; 12, Redpoll, etc.

Why the Nightingale Was Left Out.

Now if a competition were started for the twelve best British bird songsters, I very much doubt if Philomel would top the list. So few have heard the Nightingale's song. Fewer still have heard a bird of superlative song. So very few have heard that song under the best conditions.

I have, during the last half-century, listened to some thousands of 'Gales singing their "musketry of music," and out of those thousands only some half-dozen have been birds of the grandest music. Only two birds in the last dozen years have I heard in the wild state that could be called birds of the highest excellence. Let me not be misunderstood.

The best English tenor of a bygone generation was undoubtedly Sims Reeves. Now those who only heard for the first time the grand old man when he took his farewell visit round the halls would be naturally disappointed. If the same people could have listened to his rendering of "Come into the garden, Maud," or "My Pretty Jane," some forty years' previously, they would have perceived the vast difference. So with our bird musicians; only one, say, in ten thousand are top notchers. Only one Sims Reeves, Patti, or Melba in a generation.

To take another bird illustration. Out of many thousands of Thrushes I have during the last ten years only heard three birds of super-excellence. I know this will be contrary to the common experience, but I believe you want our individual experiences. Many birdy wiseacres will shake their heads, and say I am wrong.

When is a wild bird's song at its full brilliance? When the bird is two to three years old, if caged, and, I believe, about the same in its wild state. Now have the superlative songsters I have mentioned been very old birds, and have they transmitted their extra powers of song to their progeny? We do not know.

A Veteran Songster.

I have kept a 'Gale for ten years—the same bird I mean—and had him singing over my Christmas dinner table each year. That fact perhaps is unique. It was, too, a hand-reared specimen, and sung equally as well as the average wild 'Gale. Hand-reared specimens of all kinds of birds are supposed to be less vigorous than birds naturally reared, but there are exceptions to every rule.

I have had some birds that sang both by artificial light and daylight. Others that only sang by daylight, and some which sang best when partly covered up. Some sang their best when a noise of any kind was going on, like scrubbing, street traffic, etc.

The time to hear this "earthly denizen of angel song" at his best is some still evening during the last fortnight in May, for the hens are all sitting then. If near the full moon you won't have long to wait for "the low piping sound more sweet than all."

You steal as noiselessly as possible to the thicket or tree on which "Philomela" sits perched, and perhaps can see the moonlight reflected from his white breast. You can even detect the pulsation of that glorious throat. It perhaps begins slowly, then perhaps a melancholy or wailing stanza. Then, after a very short interval, it is more lively, and leads up to passages of wonderful power and execution.

No other music on this earth comes anywhere near the Nightingale's song at its zenith. One may sit the livelong night and listen, and then, when dawn appears, soon after 2 a.m., in late May, all the other choristers join in, but the "midnight reveller" is easily first, and the rest nowhere.

Then the bird man comes along, and says, "I'll box that lovely creature, and take his song home." That lovely song was meant to cheer his sitting bride, who, with five brownish-green eggs, was patiently waiting the young brood, which, in due course, would be hatched, and would have to be fed on the green, smooth caterpillars to be found on the nut bushes. Taken away from his home, why wonder if he sulks and dies?

From my own observation I cannot say that the cock takes any part in the incubation, like the male Blackcap, which relieves the hen whilst sitting. The cock 'Gale seems to spend three weeks entirely living for song alone. I have seen, however, what few naturalists appear to have seen take place. Whilst the male bird has been pouring forth his soul-stirring music, I have seen the hen fly up to him, and put a fat green caterpillar in his beak as though to say, "Oh! how perfectly lovely! You are indeed the king of Nature's songsters."

Then, on one occasion, and one only, I proved that they are polygamous. I found, in one short spinney, five nests, all within fifty yards, and only one male bird. No other 'Gales within half a mile, so that looks like proven. It was away from the bird-catcher's beaten track, and before the era of latter-day bird keeping and selling.

Then again I have, in different seasons, found an occasional male who has not mated for some reason; not enough females to go round, I suppose, and who has been compelled to become a celibate. I wish Mr. Teschemaker would kindly give his opinion of the above genuine cases.

Never have I yet seen a wild Nightingale, though surrounded in every direction by fresh ant hills, touch a live ant or cocoon, and I doubt sometimes whether we are on the right lines in giving so many ant-eggs, alive or dried, to our birds. Formic acid is extracted from ants, and who knows its effect on a bird's constitution?

As I set out to write a helpful article, I will confine the rest of my remarks to the keeping of the king of song in a cage, and will leave alone my aviary experiences, which have been many, and which have mostly ended in tragedies; cats, rats, owls, fights, etc.

First thing, Mr. Novice, see to it you have a bird of the masculine gender. Secondly, see that you feed your bird correctly, and, thirdly, see that your bird does not overfeed. There will be no song if he is too fat; half-a-dozen or so mealworms are plenty for a day.

When I started I had all to learn. Bechstein was my only guide, philosopher, and friend, and, in many respects, he cannot be beaten to-day, although his advice is nearly two hundred years old. So I began with mealworms, as many as the bird could get down him, bread crumbs, bullock's heart, roasted and shredded, hard-boiled eggs (which item has killed more British birds and Canaries than any other food), grated carrot, ants' eggs in summer, caterpillars, spiders, dried wasp cake, etc.

Occasionally I have been very disappointed after all my trouble and attention. Also, when least expected, I have been rewarded with glorious bursts of song. After many years of various methods of feeding, I find the following method the best.

The necessary items are:—Ants' eggs, the best possible; dried flies, when obtainable and good; meat meal, from the best makers; powdered biscuits, Osborne or Maizena Wafers, or broken biscuits from grocers; and grated fresh carrots. To equal parts of above add some powdered cuttlefish bone, and if the carrot does not quite moisten sufficiently add a few drops of boiling water.

Give half a dozen mealworms daily, cured wasp cake, or maggots, well scoured in bran and sand. All live insects you can obtain, i.e., spiders, earwigs, cockroaches, etc. 'Gales are particularly fond of ripe elderberries; also bananas.

See to it that your bird does not become too fat. The cage must be roomy, to give sufficient exercise. Attention also must be given to bathing and thorough cleanliness. The last item, I believe, is the most important of all. The feet must never be allowed to become clogged, and to prevent clogging I find plenty of good sharp sand or gravel as good as anything for the cage drawer. I never bother much about the padding of perches.

'Gales caught in April, not after, ought to sing well before November. If not singing before Christmas give extra mealworms and live food to bring into song.

Many practical fanciers cannot tell one sex from another. Eye and carriage are sufficient for an expert, but without good drawings, words cannot convey any precise method to differentiate the sexes. Nightingales can only be kept by an enthusiastic bird lover. They require a deal of attention and care, and no one who cannot give great personal attention to his or her birds ought to attempt to cage one of Nature's choicest songsters.

I have had the following glorious songsters in full song very recently: Nightingale, Blackcap, Garden Warbler, Song Thrush, Blackbird, Skylark, and Shama. Search the wide world over, and seven songsters to equal them could not be obtained.

Notes From an Old Diary.

By T. H. KINCH.

IT is not so long ago that I gave away several hundreds of old papers I had by me relating to birds, rabbits, etc., as I was about to remove. This gift, I hope, will have a good effect, and make a few fanciers in either fur or feather.

Since this gift I have had no end of schoolboys calling on me for papers, and bringing dead birds, moths, etc. One boy of about eight years, after reading the papers, brought me a rabbit to know if it was a pure-bred one. Another brought me a Canary to see if it was a cock, as he had bought it for one. I had to laugh over it, for it was only a hen, but I found out what he had given for it, and who he had bought it from. I sent the seller a sharp note for deceiving the boy, and he at last changed it for a cock.

To go back to birds. I have caught in my trap cage four different kinds of Tits—Cole, Blue, Oxeye, and Longtail. The three first-named I have kept together in a large cage, but soon got tired of them, as they were too restless all together, required too much insectivorous food, and are not desirable pets if all together.

I once kept a pair of Long-tailed Tits in a large waggon cage, but they were not long before they destroyed their tails, and got so unsightly that I gave them their liberty. The Cole Tits soon got tame in confinement, but the Blue Tits did not. These birds I never attempted to hand-rear; not that I should have failed to do so, but I did not care sufficiently for them.

Many a nest of Redstarts have I hand-reared. I was always fond of them; the cocks are very handsome birds when moulted well, and can be kept in confinement for some time. One, a great favourite, I had over four years, and I think after each moult he looked better. I had a good offer made for him, and let him go.

One of the Best of Pets.

Robins were always great favourites of mine. Most winters have I caught one or two, and liberated in the spring. One I kept for two years, which caused great surprise to everyone who saw it. They prophesied the bad luck it would bring me—it was a sure sign that I should have a broken limb.

Well, I can now say I never had a broken limb, but, unfortunately, I had to have a leg off, but that was not the bird's fault. After I released it I still used to feed it, and it kept about the garden for months, until another one came, and they fought, so it was killed.

Greenfinches have also been great favourites of mine. Some years ago I hand-reared a nest, giving them all away, also a large cock bird. This bird was with my Canaries, and learnt a great many of their notes, and could sing nearly as well, but if the Canaries got to higher notes then he would screech, and this so upset my wife that I gave him away to a friend, who would not part with it for any money. A cock Greenfinch I had previous to this I tried colour food on. I cannot say that anything is gained, as the natural colours do not, in my opinion, come out so nice.

I hope the colour feeding of British birds will cease, so as we can get Nature from Nature's birds. Canaries are, of course, quite different; feed them if you like, but don't attempt to improve on Nature. I hope the time will come when all British birds will be exhibited in their natural plumage. This will increase the entries, and cause many more to take them up.

One of the great secrets is to give them a natural moult out of doors, with plenty of Nature's foods. The colours will then come. The bath, of course, must not be forgotten. Many a grand bird have I moulted in this way. If they are moulted indoors the colours are, of course, not so brilliant.

Yellow-hammers I am also fond of, and their colour I have brought out more beautiful with a yellow feed. This bird will show colour feeding, perhaps, more than any other seed-eating bird. The yellow and grey Wagtails I have also colour fed.

About eighteen years ago I caged a nest of Goldfinches. I found the nest with three young ones ready to fly. They were too far gone to hand-rear, as they flew out of the nest on my going to the trees. These were pear-tree birds. (I have found, I think, more nests in apple trees than any other.) I caged them, and all three turned out to be cocks. The largest bird and the smallest I kept for myself, and the middle one I gave away.

Strange to say, my birds would not pair with the Canary, but the one I gave away did, and had four young ones the first nest, but all as dark as Sparrows. The next nest only two young ones were hatched. Then the hen Canary died when the young were about ten days old. I successfully hand-reared them, and they turned out to be cock and hen, but both dark.

I had seen them pair, but I took no notice of them, as I thought I was well aware that Mules never bred; but I found two eggs at the bottom of the cage. These I carefully marked, and put under a hen Canary which was sitting. Both proved to have birds in them, but they had died at about the tenth day. This fact surprised me, for I never expected the eggs to be full.

So there is something yet to be learned from Mules. They will breed, but, of course, not freely. I have heard of a similar instance, which I did not at the time credit, but after my experience I thought it was correct, although no young was hatched, one egg out of three only being fertile. Since this happened, some years ago, I have noticed that in other cases young have been produced from Mules.

Whether there is anything to be gained from this cross I have yet to learn, but it will be satisfactory if this problem is solved, and it is found that Mules will breed. I don't think the young will turn out exhibition specimens, only quite ordinary Mules

THE WAY IT HAPPENED TO ME

By WALLACE C. JONES (Toronto).

A Canadian reader of "Cage Birds" tells how a birthday present for his wife started him in the hobby of Canary breeding.

MY experience in the fascinating hobby of Canary breeding may not be overwhelmingly interesting to readers of CAGE BIRDS, but to me it has been one long season of interest.

I was not a lover of birds until last December; in fact, I had no idea just what a Canary should look like. I only knew that some were yellow, but I soon found out a few things, and my taking up the hobby happened in an odd way.

You see, I have a life "pardner," that is to say, a wife, and, quite naturally, try, as all other wise men do, to gratify any little wish the wife may express (it often saves a fuss). We were out walking one evening, and happening to pass a bird store went in to have a look around, and my wife immediately became attached to the lovely singing and expressed a wish for a bird for her birthday. The anniversary was some months distant, but I promised, and that was all until the next day, when I went back to that bird store and got fitted out with a nice singer for four dollars (sixteen shillings and eightpence), and a brass cage for two dollars .75 cents (eleven shillings and fivepence halfpenny), and after getting a supply of seed, etc., I went home and surprised the wife.

The Growth of the Hobby.

Well, that bird lived a month, and during that time it had the freedom of the house and used to take a daily bath in the goldfish globe. After he died I got another bird without delay, and then a hen bird. I had now become so taken with our pets that I wasn't satisfied unless I could take home a bird about three times a week. My wife at last called a halt and said we had enough; but we got more.

I set up three pairs about the first of February, and after a while I put my nests in the breeding cages, and the process of building started. To our great delight the first egg soon appeared, and after a complete clutch of four eggs in each nest the birds went to sitting, and in due time the eggs commenced to hatch; more delight. I got three out of four in each of two nests, the eggs in the third nest being clear. One nest were Yorkshires, one Rollers, and one Border Fancy.

As luck would have it I had to move my birds as I was moving my household effects to another part of the city. The chicks were only two days old when this moving took place, and it was winter time, but I covered them up well and got them moved O.K. My method of feeding, however, was very poor, and I was continually filling up the egg dish, so I guess the hens got sick of the job for they let my six hopefuls die. But I didn't get discouraged, and it wasn't long until I had more.

I bought a cheap Roller hen and mated her to an ordinary Roller singer, but before I put her nest in, which I delayed in doing, she laid an egg on the cage floor. This was after being mated up for two weeks, and of course the egg got bent, so I put in a nest to catch the rest. The next egg wasn't laid for three more days, and I was getting angry, thinking my hen no good. This egg got broken when I tried to mark it with a pencil. The third and last egg of this clutch was laid five days after the second, and I just let her sit on that one egg.

An Industrious Hen.

In the proper number of days out rolled her baby, and the next day I gave her one more from another nest. She reared the two, and before they were quite two weeks old she laid her first egg of the second clutch. This time it was only two eggs, but she hatched and reared both, and in two more weeks was on her third nest of four eggs, and two more eggs from another hen.

She brought out all the six chicks, and is now feeding her last two birds out of four eggs of her fourth nest. Two of the last nest died when half out of the shell, as the weather was extremely hot and the shell so dry. I can safely say that seven of her birds are cocks, and the other two in the nest may also be. This is "some" little hen. I might say I have never removed her mate from the time she was mated to him. I have had experience of egg-binding with three hens, but I managed to get the egg away each time, although it was a big job, and I do not care to have it happen any more.

I have a well-equipped bird-room facing north, and my wife and I spend a great deal of our time among the birds, which I keep in cages. I use single breeding box cages in most cases, and find them very satisfactory.

We entertain some of our friends in the bird-room at times, as I have it furnished with wicker chairs, etc. This entertaining in the bird-room is not customary among bird fanciers, for I know some who wouldn't let a stranger peep through the keyhole of the door during breeding season. I do not say that they are not wise, but we have so educated our birds to our fool ways that I have not seen in any instance that it has interfered with my birds. I have twenty young birds cracking seed and all in good, healthy condition; some are almost through the moult, and in almost full song, so that isn't so bad for a first-year fancier. I am experimenting with colour-feeding three birds, just to see how my luck, or method, works out before next year.

I have two large flight cages, and run my birds in as soon as they can crack seed, and I think the flight a big help to the birds. During the hot weather I put the bath in every morning, and the birds seem to enjoy a dip. I also give fresh drinking water three times a day; if I don't, the wife does.

I feed canary and rape seed as a staple food all the year round, but during the moult I give a little hemp, niga, and linseed about three times a week, also a boiled young carrot, and a wee touch of egg-food occasionally.

I have already started making more cages for next season, and so far have completed two that are beauties. I am a little fussy about having things nice, and am aiming to have a model bird-room next year if all goes well.

I have now forty birds in all, among which are Yorkshires, Norwich, Borders, and Rollers, also a pair of Australian Linnets. I bought most of my stock and cages, etc., at a bird store, and I have been most fairly treated by the keeper of this store, and I owe him a great deal of thanks for his never tiring in answering my questions about my birds. I would sooner trust to his judgment when I need stock than try to pick them out myself.

I might mention that I have learned one lesson among many others, and that is: Never count your chickens before they are hatched. To this may also be added: Leave off the counting for some time after that, because one's figures as to the number of young birds may undergo a sudden change.

I look after the management of the birds and feeding of the young ones (or, rather, preparing the egg-food, etc.—excuse me), but my wife attends to the cleaning of the cages and all the real work connected with the hobby, which anyone will admit isn't any small job when thoroughly done three times a week.

I am not giving a detailed account of my many experiences, as I am afraid it would be imposing on your readers to thrust more on them, and I also take into consideration the scarcity of paper. I hope some readers of CAGE BIRDS will sympathise with me in my uphill fight to become a fancier, as I do think that the bird hobby is just one of the sweetest of real pleasures one can pry out of this life if one will just dig after it as I am trying to do.

The Principles of Canary Breeding and Some Advice to Novices.

By J. W. TOMLINSON (Newcastle, Staffs.).

A BIG slice has gone from the lives of many of us since we made the acquaintance of the Canary hobby. So long ago was it that their introduction to the hobby is fading from the memories of some into the dim and misty past. Still there are some who can tell you that the birds were there before them, that they toddled alongside their cages, and have never wandered away from them.

There are chips off the old blocks also coming along, eager to render any little service with the birds they are capable of performing. Just one instance in illustration. I know a little chap of three years who fills the water fountains, turns the handle of the egg-mill, and never omits to beg for a bit of egg-food—"to make me sing."

Yes, reader, many of us have been "in" longer than we care to think about, for we realise how far we have travelled. Yet I am inclined to believe that there is a majority who are trusting to be "in" when we go "out"—out and into the great unknown.

The new beginner is fortunate in the possession of a weekly journal devoted entirely to his hobby. Such has not always been, and at one time secrets were jealously guarded. We recollect the time when there was just a mention of the cage bird hobby in one journal, then a share in another, and now we have one of "our own."

"Men may Come, and Men may Go."

We may ponder why, as the years roll on, time still sees the birds with us; fixtures, as it were, like the housekeeper's cupboard. Is it for the love of the hobby, for the fondness of experimenting, the endeavouring to produce something better than that we already possess, the profits to be made? Or, is it the disappointments, the wasted money, and labour lost, which keep us going? All go to make up what we may term the ups and downs of the hobby. Some do well, others better.

There have been from time to time so many different ways of breeding described and advocated that the beginner, who usually consumes all the Fancy literature he can accumulate, is likely to become confused, and flounder amongst such a conglomeration of ideas.

He would do well to recollect that from amongst so many different schemes set forth—and proved of value by their advocates—he would be well advised to choose that particular method which appears to be the most suitable to his own circumstances. There may be, from time to time, little matters cropping up that will cause some little wandering away from the route laid down, but here the fancier must use his own commonsense and judgment, and ultimately his experience.

He would also be well advised, after settling on a method, to deviate from it as little as possible. A diversion may be beneficial, but should his birds be doing well on his own particular methods and treatment, he should then let well alone, and not alter his arrangements because So-and-so acts differently.

I believe that the dominant factor in the success of different treatments in our bird rooms is that fanciers study that method of housing and treatment which produces the best results in their own particular birds. Studying, persevering, surmounting some difficulties, and submitting to others until the happy medium is acquired.

No Method Absolute.

One may advise or advocate that this or that method should be tried, according as it has proved the most beneficial in various instances, yet it would be unwise to say that any one method is the best, and this is because of the wide difference in the opinions of men, and frequently, too, in the temperament of the birds. Nevertheless, a difference in treatment may mean either failure or success, and failuro in the first season may be final for some.

On the one hand, we find the fancier who considers that nothing is too much trouble to ensure success, and with the true fancier the work amounts purely to a labour of love; love for his own particular variety, if you prefer it to be written so. Five minutes in the company of such a fancier in his bird room will give you the impression that he knows his business. You will observe the calm and confident demeanour with which he goes about his duties. He will tell you that he is a working man, and his business keeps him from home from early in the morning until five or six o'clock at night, and sometimes later than that. Furthermore, he works hard at his work: his work is of a laborious nature, and he finds it a nice change, both for the body and mind, to spend an hour or so during the evening in his bird room.

In reply to the question, "How do you manage to supply your birds with the necessary foods during the daytime?" he says, "Oh, it's quite simple; before I go to work I give them a supply of egg-food, soaked rape seed, and a small supply of green food, just sufficient to meet their requirements until the evening. I then give them another supply, renew the drinking water, blow off the husks, fill up the seed hoppers, and renew the supply of crushed hemp."

"Do your breeding hens get as much egg food as those of the breeder who supplies it three or more times during the day?" "Yes; the amount practically works out at the same, because he would give smaller quantities at each meal." "So the bulk of your duties are done during the evening?" "That is so; I try to work, as far as possible, on a method, and, previously to going up to the bird room, I boil an egg: this I leave to cool, and I make the egg food for the following morning's supply after I have seen to the birds. You see, when you take the different little items without a set method something is liable to get overlooked."

"To prevent this, I supply the egg food first, then the green food, the crushed hemp, fill the seed hoppers and the drinkers, and finish with brushing up and cleaning away the husks from the floor. It is rather surprising how quickly one seems to get through the work by taking the separate items collectively."

"Do you gather your day's supply of green food in the morning?" "Oh, no; it is collected at night, and the ends placed in water to keep it fresh. After pinching off these the green food is dry, and perfectly safe to use next morning."

In reply to a question as to where he keeps his stock during the winter, he says: "Circumstances compel me to a room that I cannot supply with artificial heat, even though I feel inclined to use it; therefore, as I do not supply the heat, as it were, outwardly, I must give it inwardly, that is, in the food supply. In addition to the rape and canary I give a little mixed seeds, hemp, a wee bit of egg food, apple or boiled carrot; even rape seedlings grown in boxes under those flights are appreciated, and I change the foods on different days, not forgetting gritty sand and clean drinking water. During a spell of mild weather the bath is allowed, and a little curtailing of the extra diets is exercised. Once a week they get a bit of bread and milk; this wards off many minor ailments."

"Do you consider it necessary to clean the cages out during the winter months?" "Yes; certainly; once a week will be sufficient, unless one has them overcrowded, and in such an event the birds are liable to pluck out each other's feathers." "Do you continue with this treatment up to the time of commencing to breed?" "Yes, and no. Yes, so far as the same foods are given; no, as regards the quantities. I continue to increase the quantities very gradually after the New Year until, at the commencement of March, they are having half a teaspoonful of egg food to each bird three times per week. On the other days they get a pinch of mixed seeds and a spray of green food daily, preferably dandelion at this season. I use a little discretion, and, if there is any possibility of an early spring, I increase the quantity of nutritious seeds, etc., a little earlier in the season."

How Not to Do It.

Although this fancier cannot command success, he deserves it, but we find, on the other hand, the fancier who considers that seed and water are quite sufficient for birds that are not breeding. A winter's accumulation of the birds' excreta has been known to heap up in the flights, "it helps to keep the birds warm." One could argue with this fancier that though a certain amount of benefit may arise from warmth of the room during winter, it is not necessary to supply the stimulation through stale excreta, but rather through the diet.

One word in regard to this. If birds are kept in an artificially-heated room, then careful and plain dieting is necessary to prevent them coming forward into breeding condition before the proper season. In such a room hens have been known to lay at Christmas, fed simply on rape and canary.

With regard to difference in the temperament of the birds, we find that were some cocks allowed to remain with the hens during incubation they would delight in putting their beaks into the eggs; others will pull all the nesting from around the hen as she is sitting; others will bully the hen every time she comes off the nest.

On the other hand, there are those, and they are, I believe, in the majority, that, will do none of these things, but will be found sitting quietly on the eggs when the hen comes off for exercise or food. Some cocks will feed the youngsters, others will not; these latter, I believe, are in the minority.

So, taken generally, the cocks appear to give less trouble than the hens, and even these, in their second breeding season, are usually as comfortable as the proverbial old shoe. Probably a great deal consists in our having become familiar to the hen's little oddities, likes, and dislikes during her first breeding season, or, perhaps, I had better write, her attempts at breeding. For we find that it is the young hen that usually frustrates the best laid schemes. Sometimes we find that should the cock be left in the cage during incubation she objects to his presence, and will not sit properly. What is to be done? The remedy is very simple; take the cock away.

CANARY QUERIES

AN EIGHT-YEAR-OLD (Kensington).—The bird's years are somewhat against him, and you cannot expect him to sing now that he has started to moult. Treat as follows for a few weeks, and it should assist him materially through a good and complete moult, when he should soon resume singing. Keep him quite on the warm side, but be careful to protect him from cold direct draughts, or sudden extremes of heat and cold. A light cover thrown over the cage until the bird has quite ceased dropping feathres will also be of assistance to him. As a staple diet give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day, in addition to this give separately half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed, or the equivalent in bread and milk now and again as a change. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, linseed and broken groats. Give a morsel of some green food or freshly gathered wild seeds daily. In the drinking water for three consecutive days add ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a pea, and after that give five drops each of tincture of gentian, syrup of saffron, and diluto sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. When the feathers have ceased dropping you may add 20 drops of chemical food to the water two days in every three for a month or so, to help the bird to throw off the effects of moulting. With regard to the sore legs, this is not unusual in old birds about the moulting season. To relieve it, bathe the legs daily in a solution of boracic acid for a few minutes, then dry, and slightly anoint with zinc ointment. A small teaspoonful of boracic acid in a saucerful of warm water will make a suitable bath.

VARIOUS (M.W.I.).—(1) It is quite possible that the cock being out of breeding condition was the real cause of the infertility. The fact that the eggs of both hens were equally unproductive would go to point in that direction, though the test is not conclusive in this case by any means. Had you given some particulars I might have been able to be of more use to you in this case, but you do not even say whether the cock was in song, much less anything about its apparent health. But, anyway, it is too late now to think of trying again, even if you had another cock to try with, so I cannot advise you better than to wait until the moult is well over, and then look round for a young and lusty cock in vigorous health and full song, and keep him for next season's breeding. As the hens are only in their first season they will be quite suitable to mate up again next season, and, if they retain their health and activity, for several years to come. (2) Judging from your description, I think the hen is probably a broken green Yorkshire, but it is not possible to be quite definite from a written description such as yours. (3) For the above hen the best mate depends upon what you wish to produce. As your hen appears to be what is termed a buff-green, if you want to breed greens a self yellow-green, bred from self greens would be the best mate, or if you wish to breed marked or variegated, which, by the way, are, in this breed, termed un-even marked—a clear, dark-eyed yellow bred from slightly marked birds of a marked strain. (4) See Mr. Norman's replies next week for answer to your Lark query, which should have been written on a separate sheet.

STIFF HIND CLAW (H. G. H.)—I read your query to mean that the claw stands out straight behind, and is not curled underneath the foot. If this is so, it may be due simply to a weak or relaxed muscle, which may disappear spontaneously after a time, or to a thickening of the cuticle at the junction of the toes underneath. In the latter case a small "corn" is apt to form and make the trouble permanent. But in either case you cannot do any harm, and may quite remove the trouble by the following treatment. Bathe the whole foot daily for a few minutes in very warm water, and then remove it and hold for a minute or two in a saucer of cold water in which you have dissolved a teaspoonful of common salt. Then dry gently and carefully work about it a very little of Jeyes' Veterinary ointment, or any similar preparation. Do this daily for a week or two, and in addition place small and almost round perches in the cage—say, about the size of an ordinary lead pencil, and leave these perches in until you see that the bird grips with the claw fairly, when you may put in one a trifle thicker, and thereafter gradually work back to the ordinary sized perch. These small perches may possibly require to be in for two or three months, but even in that case they rarely fail to cure any case that is not beyond hope of relief.

FERTILISATION OF EGGS, ETC. (Ubique).—You ought to get a copy of our handbook, "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our manager would send you for 7d., post free, and master its contents before another season arrives. With regard to your particular questions: (1) I have no definite record of the shortest time known betwixt actual mating and the production of fertile eggs, but given birds in good breeding condition an interval of about thirty hours is certainly sufficient for the purpose. Thus, if an unmated hen laid the first egg of a clutch and the cock was introduced the day that egg was laid, the third and each subsequent egg of the clutch, assuming the eggs were laid on successive days, may be expected to be fertile. (2) It would not necessarily be detrimental to feed with home-made egg food one day and the prepared food you name the next, in the rearing of young, but the egg food should be made fresh each day it is used. It would be most risky to keep it in a glass, or any other receptacle, over the intervening day, and use it on the third day after it was made. (3) By the time the young just hatched out are reared and off their parents' care it will be very late indeed to try for another brood. I should not think it worth encouraging the parents to try again this season.

ABNORMAL FEATHERS (J. W.S.).—The trouble your bird has with moulting is not unusual in aged birds, and yours is now "getting on." The following treatment will set matters right. Keep it in a fairly warm and equable place, but you need not overdo it in the matter of heat. Allow bird to bathe as freely as it likes, but always in the early part of the day at this time of year, and also provided it does not appear to suffer from chill after bathing. In addition to the usual seed diet give a morsel of bread the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, slightly dusted with flour of sulphur, and then dusted with soft sugar every third day for a month. On the intervening days give first ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence in the drinking water, and next a morsel of banana or carrot, the latter either raw of boiled. If the bird's usual diet consists of a plain canary and rape mixture, give also on the days when you give the fruit half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and linseed. But if the usual diet consists of an elaborate seed mixture, as usually sold in packets, the latter item should be omitted.

WRETCHEDLY THIN (T. H. H.).—(1) I fear these birds are not likely to do you much good in the breeding line, and the one that seems to have had a cold so long is probably not a fit subject to breed with at all. Try the following treatment for a month, and then report result. Keep in a fairly warm place, out of direct draughts or extreme fluctuations of temperature. In addition to the staple diet give each, every second day, a piece of bread, the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, and two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled with soft sugar, and on the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of mixed seed and a morsel of banana. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and after this give instead, every second day for a fortnight, 20 drops of whisky, five each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre; then stop it for a week, and resume it, and give again for another fortnight. (2) If in good health, apart from the effect of moulting, the voice will return without assistance in the course of a month or so. To help it you may add to the water, every second day for a week or fortnight, 20 drops each of glycerine and lemon juice, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, as may seem necessary. (3) The proper quantity of chemical food to add to three ounces of water is an ordinary teaspoonful. To get the best effect of the medicine it should be given either in distilled water or water which has been well boiled and allowed to stand until cold. (4) The dietary you name is quite suitable for this season, and should suffice to bring the birds into good breeding condition as soon as the weather is suitable for these operations.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

ABOUT SKYLARKS (Larkonian).—It is doubtful if your freshly caught young Skylark will commence to sing until he is quite or nearly through the moult. You cannot do better than keep him steady and feed well. I am sorry I do not know the food you mention, it may be all right, but I should prefer to use a good brand of insectile food as used for Warblers, or one of the admirable food mixtures given in the Nutshell booklet on the Skylark, post free 2½d., from this office. You should feed well just now, as he will soon be going into the moult, and the better he is managed the sooner he will come into song. A little hard-boiled egg occasionally, and a few insects will assist considerably.

FEEDING YOUNG MULES (M. B.).—Young Mules, like all young creatures, require careful management. They leave the nest early and soon commence to feed themselves, and it is at this time one has to be particularly careful. Of course they must have soft food, but unless they are watched they will frequently over eat, and many are lost in consequence. In addition to soft food, they should be given split groats, cracked canary and rape, and as they get on to this food, the egg food should be diminished. It is a good plan to give them a little bread and milk about twice a week, as this regulates the bowels. A most important thing in the rearing of young Mules is cleanliness; they should be cleaned out every other day, and a fresh set of perches put in All food and water vessels should be washed out every time they are refilled. If you have many do not over crowd.

COLOUR-FEEDING A THRUSH (D. W. S.).—The Thrush is one of the easiest of our British birds to colour-feed, and a nicely fed bird is certainly improved in colour. The method of doing it is simply to mix the tasteless pepper in with the bird's ordinary food. Commence with a little at first until you get it up to full strength, which is one teaspoonful of best quality pepper to four teaspoonsful of soft food; thoroughly mix it. Twice a week dissolve in two tablespoonsful of water as much citrate of iron as will cover a threepenny-piece, and add to the soft food a small teaspoonful of freshly ground linseed three times a week. When the bird is nearly through, you can gradually reduce the colour-food, but if you are exhibiting him you must continue to give him a little occasionally all through the show season.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

THE KEEPING OF BUDGERIGARS (C. Holmes).—(1) Budgerigars do not use any nesting material, they simply clear out the interior of the husk to their liking. (2) Apple or banana is good for them, but some individuals will touch neither. (3) Such occurs with all species of birds to a greater or lesser degree, but is not necessarily common to all—they will settle all right ultimately; evidently she is not satisfied with her mate's attentions and wishes him to feed her. (4) They are already old enough to breed from. (5) The feeding may be normal, but watch against constipation, and put a few drops of chemical food in the drinking water twice or thrice weekly. Give a tablespoonful of crushed oats twice a week. (6) These birds are best kept in pairs, not necessarily one pair only in cage or aviary (this depends upon the size of cage, etc.), but there should only be an equal number of adult males and females in each cage or aviary. (7) Some do not separate the sexes at all, and it is only necessary where they insist on breeding all the year round—the end of October or a little later will be soon enough to do so.

BUDGERIGARS NOT NESTING (Esperance).—The Budgerigars have gone out of breeding condition for the time being, but there is yet time for them to go to nest this season. If you suspect the wind blowing in at the end of the aviary to be the cause, and the sacking insufficient to check it, then tack a piece of roofing felt over this end, outside the netting, and the birds should then be quite snug. Now they can come into a small open flight, such covering up will not make the aviary too dark. Beyond supplying the necessary diet to bring the birds into breeding condition and keep them fit, you cannot do anything else to keep them fit. But it has been a very bad season for birds, and losses and failures have been rather numerous. The only thing to do if these birds persistently refuse to go to nest will be to sell off two pairs of them. Watch our advert. pages and buy a pair that have reared young—your other birds are then certain to emulate them. As regards a house pet, I am in a bit of a dilemma; such have to be bought, and except in the case of someone who must sell off in a hurry, there are no cheap birds now. Several nice species have been referred to in previous replies, and I can only again say "watch the advert pages," and when you see what you want at a price which suits you, snap it up. As regards the ailing bird, give it a dose of fluid magnesia every fourth day and chemical food on the intervening days. It should recover. Keep it in fairly warm quarters and strictly out of draught till it is well again.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

House Sparrow or Tree Sparrow (J. Nicholson).—There are many points of difference between the plumage of the House and Tree Sparrows. For instance, the crown of the head of the House Sparrow is ashen grey, while that of the Tree Sparrow is rich brown, and the House Sparrow has not the black patch on the cheek which is so conspicuous in the Tree Sparrow. The white markings on the wing in themselves render identification easy, for while only the lesser wing coverts of the House Sparrow are tipped with white both the lesser and greater coverts of the Tree Sparrow have white tips, so that the one bird shows only one white bar on the closed wing, and the other has two. Experts who have once pronounced an opinion have a way of sticking to it, and where it is possible it is as well to have indisputable corroboration of one's own decision. Hence the keeping of the wing of the dead bird as mentioned.

The Interesting Hobby of Canary Breeding.

By S. DUNN, Hucknall Torkard.

MY experience in the hobby of bird-keeping is of four seasons only. I commenced with two pairs of Canaries, Crests and Crestbreds, which I obtained from a friend who had some birds advertised for sale in CAGE BIRDS.

After keeping my birds for a few weeks I found myself getting more and more interested in the hobby, and as the breeding season came nearer, I began to study the best methods of treating them.

I obtained a copy of CAGE BIRDS and a book by Claude St. John (Canary Breeding for Beginners) from which I gained sufficient knowledge to enable me to effect the successful breeding and rearing of a quantity of young birds.

Satisfactory Progress.

My first season results, from the two pairs of Crests, were eleven young birds, from which I reared ten. The second year I had four pairs, and I bred and reared seventeen young ones. The third year, with the same number of birds mated, I bred twenty-one youngsters and reared eighteen. This season I have six hens and three cocks, running one cock with two hens alternately, and have bred twenty-six young ones, all healthy birds.

I rear the young on the ordinary egg food, and when three weeks old I give a little stale bread soaked in milk twice a week. When a month old I feed on crushed hemp and canary seed, also the bread and milk as before, and continue this until they are able to crack the seed for themselves (no green food).

I use the ordinary breeding cages with sand trays, finding cleanliness a great factor in rearing and keeping young birds, and the sand trays are easily drawn out. I clean the young birds out every day and supply a little fresh gritty sand, also fresh water every day with three drops of Parrish's chemical food in the drinking pot.

To any one desirous of taking up a hobby and requiring an inexpensive pastime, I should most assuredly recommend the interesting hobby of Canary breeding. When once started, and one gets a few young birds to rear, the interests of the hobby become ever increasing.

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL.

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVIARIES and CAGES, BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DISEASES & THEIR CURE SEEDS, Etc., and devotes a separate chapter to each individual variety.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or lose sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

FOR 1916.

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

General meeting held Aug. 10, Mr. Espie chair. Mr. Coulthard elected a member. Vote of condolence passed to the relatives of Capt. A. C. Young, who was killed in action. The question of the future of the society was discussed, several speaking on the subject. One speaker asserted that before the present secretary would take the position as secretary, a motion was passed at the meeting at which he was elected, February 15, 1912, to give £5 per year as remuneration. This statement was disproved, as the motion regarding salary was passed on Feb. 2, 1911. Eventually a motion to rescind this minute was carried, six voting for and none against. Decided to have a special meeting, Sept. 2, to consider the date of open show.—Jos. Reed, Sec.

NORTH LIVERPOOL C.B.S.

Meeting concurrent with the August nest feather show at headquarters, upwards of fifty members being present. Mr. E. Battersby occupied the chair. Mr. A. E. Wilkins (chairman), very kindly deputising for the Hon. Sec., Mr. Holden, who was otherwise engaged. Report on the visit to the Zoo at Otterspool, was read, and vote of thanks passed to Mr. T. R. Lonsdale, Hon. Sec. Garston C.B.S., who acted as organising sec. A few more nominations for membership were accepted, including an ex-member who has served at the front. The Chairman reviewed forthcoming events and made an appeal to members for their support, in justice to the lecturers, etc., who were always so ready to give their services free in the interests of the Fancy. Sept. 5, at 8, at the Schools, Royal Street, lecture on "Hybridising," by Mr. J. W. Cutmore. Members and friends cordially invited.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

General meeting, August 1, St. Thomas's Schools, Ardwick. Rev. J. W. Wragg presided over a fair muster. Sec. read the half-yearly balance-sheet, which was considered very satisfactory. Mr. Schofield (Failsworth) then gave a lecture entitled "Canaries in general." The lecturer is an old breeder and exhibitor of 20 years' standing, and his advice to the members was of much importance. He dealt with Norwich, Yorkshires, Lancashires, Crests, also relating his many experiments in in-breeding. After the lecture a lengthy discussion followed, and Mr. Schofield was called upon to answer numerous questions. He handled them in a masterly way. There was sometimes a little difference of opinion, still, Mr. Schofield never wavered from the point of his lecture. A vote of thanks was given Mr. Schofield. Those who missed this lecture will have an opportunity of hearing Mr. Schofield later in the season. Give him what he deserves—a well-attended meeting, and you will hear something that will interest you. Subject will appear later.—J. Spencer.

LONDON AND COUNTIES A.C.B.

On Aug 6 19 members and friends attended an outing to Box Hill and Dorking. Arriving at Box Hill the party were very much impressed by the lovely view which can be seen from outside the station. Taking to the road, a quaint old-fashioned church was admired by all, and, going in, the party nearly filled it. After continning our walk through some very pretty scenery, a halt was called for lunch, which was partaken in a field under a haystack surrounded by some splendid beech trees, and here we heard the song of the Skylark, Linnet, and Greenfinches. After lunch some of the ladies went into a farmhouse and got new-laid eggs from the nest and were shown over the dairy. Marching on again through the fields and woods we reached Ranmore Common, where the views stretching for miles around received the attention of all. Our next halt was at the local post office for refreshments and to feed the chickens, which was soon being done in good style by Miss A. Bell. Getting on our way once again we had some lovely views over Dorking, and on arriving at the Temperance Hotel in West Street, Dorking, a tea was waiting, which everyone enjoyed. After tea a little walk through the town took us to the train home, and we arrived at London Bridge at 9 o'clock, tired but well satisfied with a most enjoyable outing, which it is hoped to make an annual feature.—W. Gilbert, Hon. Sec.

The Principles of Canary Breeding.

By J. W. TOMLINSON, Newcastle, Staffs.

Coming to the practice of some of taking the cock away after the third egg is laid, we find some hens will not sit and feed the youngsters without him, and in this case we have to return him. Should we intend to work on the colony system, the objecting hen has frequently to be removed, and tried in a singlo cage.

Again, we come across the hen that is comfortable under any one of the above methods, but will not feed her youngsters, and for what reason? She may be the nest sister to other hens that can do "nothing wrong." At the outset we fed her on the same food as the other hens; then we tried her with the diet she seemed to have a preference for, but to no purpose, she consumes the diet, and yet the youngsters gradually die. Sometimes we find her do likewise with the second round, and then suddenly change, and rear the third round.

Yet again we find hens that will not rear a chick during their first season. In the case of a newly-purchased hen we have to consider whether it may be caused through a change of surroundings, such as bringing a hen into a colder county, putting her up to breed where she is being continually disturbed by people in the room, or a sudden change of diet, together with purchasing her late in the season. When none of these causes applies, one can only conclude that the trouble must be caused through some undeveloped instinct of motherhood.

Other hens, both young and old, and they are rather numerous too, will pluck their youngsters on leaving the nests; they prefer the light-coloured feathers to build a new nest, which is frequently placed upon the old one. The remedy is obvious; put the youngsters either in a nursery cage, or in the next compartment of the breeding cage, part them with a wire slide, and arrange the perches so that the parent or parents can feed them through the wires. Occasionally a hen will crop up that will commence to pluck out the pen feathers as soon as they appear; such a one deserves a rest—the long rest.

In a general way one can lay down a few principles to assist a novice in getting through his first season, and in so doing one would say, that if he can procure two-year-old hens that have proved good, he should by all means get them.

Obtain them as soon as possible after the moulting season is over, say, about November to January, and place them in the room you desire them to occupy during the breeding season. In case you do not obtain them before November, then ascertain whether they have been kept in a cold room or otherwise; also follow out, as near as you possibly can, their former owner's methods of feeding, and the methods he adopted in the breeding cage.

Don't move them about from place to place if avoidable, as this will often put a hen off for some little time from going to nest. Go about your feeding and other duties as quietly as possibly, to avoid frightening the birds, and do not move a hen off her nest just to see if the eggs are still there.

You may, and should, take a glance into a nest of youngsters when the hen is off them, and remove any that may be dead. Should one be found dragged from the nest on to the cage bottom, and still showing signs of life, hold it in a closed hand, and breathe on it.

Well-fed youngsters will begin to leave the nest in about eighteen days, but so long as they "cry" for food don't deprive them of their parents. Afterwards, and when feeding themselves, do not overdo them with egg food, yet allow them sufficient. A guide to this may be taken that where the youngsters are eating all their egg food, and not touching the crushed hemp or the soaked rape, then they are receiving from the egg food alone all that is necessary to sustain them, and the remedy is obvious; give less egg food.

Just a word about soaked rape. Personally, I have used it successfully both for old and young birds too, right up to the time the latter have begun to moult. Further, I continued it with success right through the moult for one season. It was soaked from day to day, for twenty-four hours, rinsed well, and drained off, not rubbed dry, before using. Just a small quantity is all that is required; if it is fed at, say, 9 a.m., or earlier, any that remains should be cleared away at tea time.

The judicious use of egg food will also apply during the moult, say, about half a teaspoonful on alternate days to each bird; on the intervening days the same quantity of mixed seeds should be allowed. The egg food may beneficially be substituted once, or even twice, per week by bread and milk, say, a piece about half an inch cube to each bird, clearing away at teatime any that may be uneaten. Avoid baths on cold or chilly days, and so cover the drinking water on such days that the birds cannot get bodily into it to bathe. The seed heads of wild plants, such as chickweed, groundsel, or the like may be given.

If it be Rollers that you are keeping, there is nothing to be gained by caging off your young cocks until you can recognise the formation of a tour, or, maybe, a roll, from amongst the warbling; warbling, in this sense, meaning their tours and the rolls in embryo, or in their undeveloped condition.

HOW TO MOULT BRITISH FINCHES.

By E. J. PETTIT (Leyton)

IN the hope that my experience may be of some assistance to novices, I am sending a few notes on "How I Moult my British Hardbills for Exhibition." Fresh air plays a most important part in the moulting of my birds. They are kept in a shed which is built in the garden close to the house, so that it is sheltered from the wind and rain. It stands on four legs, so that the floor is 2ft. 6in. off the ground. Altogether it is 7ft. high, with a span roof. The length is 4ft., and the width 3ft. It is painted inside with sky blue, and on the outside dark green. This shed is not very large, but it holds twelve cages arranged on two shelves.

If the birds are to be got very steady for showing I do not believe in keeping them in very large cages while they are moulting. My cages are 12in. long, 10in. high, and 6in. deep for birds such as the Linnet, Redpoll, Twite, or Siskin, and 14in. long, 12in. high, and 8in. deep for the Goldfinch, Bullfinch, or Greenfinch, and 18in. long, 14in. high, and 10in. deep for any of the Buntings. They are all of the box pattern, with loose wire front, and sliding doors. Each cage has two perches at the same distance apart as those in my show cages.

In order that the birds may moult out a good colour, which goes a long way to winning on the show bench, I always give a little colour food, beside plenty of wild seed. My method of giving the colour food is to mix it with the seed in this way; I get a 2lb. glass jar, and into this I put a mixture of canary one part, summer rape half part, and linseed half part, this I mix well together, and on the top I put a teaspoonful of the colour food, increasing it to two teaspoonfuls as time goes on, and the birds get further into moulting. I pour about a teaspoonful of olive oil on the top of the colour food, and, after letting the oil run well into the seed, I mix the whole up well together with a stick of wood, so as to get the colour food well mixed with the seed. Having done that, I cover the jar over, and leave it for a week.

I find it is a good plan to keep two jars going at the same time, so as to have plenty of colour food in stock. I get this ready about the first week in July, and give each bird a teaspoonful during the second week of the month; one teaspoonful is plenty for each bird. Of course, I give them besides some wild seed freshly gathered, and insects when I can get them.

Let me here advise a novice not to colour feed a Greenfinch unless it be a good yellow bird. I have found that in most cases colour feed entirely spoils Greenfinches, for it causes them to moult out a dirty grey. I never have much trouble in getting my birds to start moulting, but if I do I put a little saffron in their drinking water, and this soon starts them. When the moulting is due to commence I find shepherd's purse a very good wild seed to give the birds.

My Bullfinches especially have plenty of fruit in season, and I find this helps to bring them out a good deep colour. Right through the moulting I put a small piece of sulphate of iron in the drinking water; this is a good tonic, fixes the colour, and prevents any looseness; I believe nothing beats rainwater in the bath for putting a polish on British birds, and I also give them this for drinking water when it is convenient.

I forgot to mention that the front of my shed consists of two wire doors; they are matchboarded up to about a foot to keep the floor nice and dry, and inside the doors I have canvas blinds, which draw on a wire, so that the shed may be darkened when the birds are being colour fed. Outside the wire doors there are two extra pieces of canvas for covering at night.

When the birds are well through the moulting I begin to train them for the show bench. I run them out into their show cages occasionally, and speak to them all the time. By doing this I find the birds get very steady. Once a week I run them into an old spare cage, and spray them with clean soft water. When the birds begin to fine down in their plumage I gradually leave off the colour food, giving them at that time only a little three times a week, and this I continue right through the show season.

I would finish these few remarks by advising all novices not to get more birds than they can properly manage and keep in perfect health. Good health means a quick moulting, and a quick moulting means a bird in perfect plumage. Lastly; take in Cage Birds.

Eighteen Years of Mule Breeding.

By E. RIDLEY (Manchester).

IF the following short notes prove of any help to novices in the science of mule breeding, my time will not have been spent in vain in relating some happenings during my eighteen years' experience in Mule or Hybrid breeding, for it has ever been a pleasure to me to help those with less experience than myself.

It is remarkable what some are told concerning mule breeding. I met a friend the other day who said he had been told to clear out of the room all cock Canaries, or he would never succeed in breeding mules. I proved to him in my own bird room the folly of this statement, by showing him all the cock birds in cages opposite to the muling pairs, and singing freely, and nests of mules too.

My first experience of bird breeding was with a Roller cock and a supposed Green Canary hen. She laid thirteen eggs, built three perfect nests, sitting her full time in each case, and I then discovered that she was a Linnet-Canary mule. I separated them, having had no results, and the hen sang till she dropped dead on the cage bottom.

The next season I purchased from a neighbour, and a gentleman fancier, Mr. A. Bladon, a yellow Cinnamon Norwich cock and clear buff Norwich hen. From these I bred two large yellow green cocks, and four hens, two yellows, and two buffs. I then purchased two Goldfinch cocks, and the next season, after taking a nest of Canaries from each, I paired up the hens with Goldies, and from these I bred six good dark mules, two yellows, and four buffs.

I did not like them being so dark, and showed them to an old fancier who at once advised me to colour feed and show them which I did and proved the truth of his statement that they would be in the money. The first year I got first and special for best bird in the show with one of the yellow cocks. (Of course as a novice.)

However, I was not allowed to remain a novice very long, having shown in the open with honours. Another fancier came to see my birds, not the type of the first fancier mentioned. He offered me a clear Norwich cock, rather ancient, for one of my buff cock mules, and with this he gained many prizes (novices beware). I thought he was doing me a good turn, but he was doing himself one instead.

I have always admired the light mule, and the even marked, and I made up my mind to try and breed some. To obtain these I purchased a large clear bred buff Lancashire cock, I paired this bird to my hens, and by Sib-breeding year after year I have now got a few hens that throw the light mule. I have not yet got the clear but though I am in my 61st summer I still hope to obtain one.

I have not had a good season this time as regards numbers, but hope to rear the seven I have got. One is a fairly light yellow, large bird, and one is a buff evenly marked on eyes and wings.

I may say for five years I have been trying for the Greenfinch-Chaffinch, and last year, 1915, I got one, but it only lived eight hours. We need to remember the old adage "If at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again." The weather here has been very wet and cold, and I have had many dead in shell, for my room is a very cold one.

To get my birds into breeding form I gather the young leaves of dandelion and the ripe heads for the British as soon as possible, and for Goldies I use plenty of hemp, teazle, inga, maw, and linseed, with plenty of fresh, clean water, sharp grit, continual bathing, and roomy cages. I would say, too, don't forget Cage Birds week by week, for I am bound to own that I owe much of my success to the perusal of it.

THE LINNET AND HOW TO KEEP IT.

By W. C. COWARD (Devonport).

MUCH has been said in Cage Birds from time to time about various kinds of British birds and their keeping, but not very much of this has been about the Brown Linnet, although I think that some readers will agree with me when I say our Brown Linnet is one of Britain's sweetest songsters, and deserves more thought than is generally given him.

The Linnet makes an ideal cage bird, and with very little trouble can be kept in perfect health, I am a very keen fancier of this beautiful bird, and during many years I have kept no other kind. It is not strange, therefore, that I should like more fanciers to take a keen interest in this little songster.

Let us suppose then that we are going to keep Linnets as pet birds. The first thing we must think about is our cages, some people keep Linnets in what are called back cages, these are very small affairs about 7½ins. long, 7ins. high, and 5½ins. wide, they are by far too small for the keeping of any bird permanently, and birds which are kept in them usually break their tails and entirely spoil their beauty.

The cages I use are of the ordinary box pattern, 14ins. long, 12ins. high, and 7ins. wide, these are not so large as to be cumbersome, but they allow a Linnet plenty of room to move, and will show him off to perfection.

Having decided on our cages, the next thing will be to get our birds, and the best way to do this is to catch our own. If, however, that is not possible, we must try to get in touch with a fancier who captures them himself, and tell him what we want. I should advise the beginner to buy birds that have been caught a few weeks before coming into his possession, even if he has to pay a little more for them.

I like Linnets that have been caught in August, September, or October, as at this time they can generally soon be tamed, and in most cases will begin to sing in less than a month.

Of course, many good birds are caught later in the year, in fact I myself caught a beautiful specimen last year in February, and in less than a week the bird was singing as well as any of my old birds.

Fresh caught Linnets are better put several together in a breeding cage with seed and water inside for the first week or so. Do not overcrowd; four in one breeding cage is quite enough, give them crushed hemp, and scalded summer rape.

When you think them ready to be caged off separately, feed them on best Spanish canary seed and summer rape as staple diet, and half a teaspoonful of crushed hemp once a week.

As a tit bit mixture I use 2ozs. dandelion seed, 1oz. maw seed, and 1oz. lettuce, this mixture should be given two or three times a week, but not in too large a quantity, a half teaspoonful to each bird will be quite enough. The tit bit mixture of course, should be given separately from the stock food; birds fed in this way should keep fit and well, and make their owners proud of them, for when the birds are in good health and properly fed they will sing in daylight or gaslight.

Bird keepers must never forget to give their pets plenty of fresh air; put the birds out of doors as much as possible, always keeping them out of cutting winds or out of the direct rays of the sun, also don't forget that pussy may be about somewhere near the cage, and see that it is hung out of her reach.

Just now we are on the eve of the moulting season, and a few drops of tincture of steel in the drinking water will be very useful, the water should be boiled and allowed to grow cold before the steel drops are added, and you must be sure to use glass drinkers not metal ones.

As soon as you find the birds are well started in the moult put them in a corner of the room with a light cover over their cage, this should help them to throw their feathers more easily and more quickly. It is scarcely necessary to say that fresh water must be given every day for drinking, and a bath should be hung on the cage door. Linnets are very fond of bathing, and it keeps their plumage in good order.

Give plently of green food such as lettuce, dandelion, etc., and any kind of fruit that is in season, and for the fancier's benefit as well as that of his pets a regular supply of Cage Birds for Friday.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, FLEET STREET, LONDON.

Twitterings.

Swansea C.B.A. has fixed its open show for Nov. 16; judges: Canary section, Mr. J. H. Roe, Esq.; British and Mules, Mr. C. Hoult-on.

Societies requiring the patronage of the Northern British, Mule and Foreign Bird Club, writes Mr. W. Curry, Sec., 6, Roxburgh Place, Newcastle, should apply at once as a meeting to allot same will be held Aug. 26, in Shield's Cafe, Bigg Market, Newcastle, at 8. Further particulars will be sent on application.

The Wild Birds Committee of the East Sussex County Council have decided to apply to the Secretary of State for a renewal for a further period of five years of Clause viii. of the Wild Birds Protection Order, 1911, for the Administrative County of East Sussex. This clause prohibits entirely the taking of any kind of wild birds' eggs throughout the localities mentioned therein.

Alleged Fatal Infection from a Parrot.

Reporting to the Dover Health Committee on 26th July, the Medical Officer stated that one case of diphtheria which caused the death of a medical man had been proved to have been contracted from a pet Parrot.

Mr. S. Wilcock, hon. sec., Open Norwich Plainhead Club, 16, Back Manor Street, Eccleshill, Bradford, writes that Nov. 25, Dec. 16, Dec. 23, and Dec. 30, are still open for patronage. Secretaries of societies desiring the patronage of the club for either of these dates should apply as quickly as possible.

Mr. J. Kilshaw writes that owing to being very busy at his work he has resigned the secretaryship of the Bolton Roller Canary Society, and Mr. Thos. Ormston has taken his place. Mr. Ormston's address is 57, Croston Street, Bolton, to which all communications should be addressed.

TEN SHILLINGS FOR A LETTER.

WE know that many readers of Cage Birds turn first of all to the correspondence page, and with a view of making this page quite the most interesting of any in our journal we purpose awarding each week until further notice a prize of ten shillings for the letter which, in the opinion of the Editor, is the best of those published.

The letters sent in answer to our prize questions of the past few weeks have been of great interest, but when we put a direct question for reply the field is of course restricted, and only a section of our readers can reply in any particular week.

The weekly prize we are now offering will be open to all our readers alike. The letters may be on any subject, so long as they are on birdy matters. They may be sent at any time, and every week a prize of ten shillings will be paid for one of the letters published.

We are sure that every reader of any issue of Cage Birds, or of any page of Cage Birds, must, as he reads, find something on which he would like to express an opinion, or something which suggests something else which he knows would be of value to others if expressed in print. Let him then sit down at once and send us a note. It may not be published the same week perhaps; but when it is published the writer may get ten shillings for his trouble. Even if he does not win the prize, he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he has helped to make the only paper devoted to the hobby of bird-keeping interesting to his fellow bird-keepers, who in their turn are helping to interest him.

An advantage of the present proposition is that no reader need be in want of a subject. He may take the current number or any back number, or even this proposition itself if he so chooses, and write in support of or against anything he may find, or the letters may be quite independent of anything that has gone before. The field is practically illimitable; the idea is before our readers, and it is for them to help us in our endeavour to make Cage Birds interesting to one and all alike.

We would say just one word to lady readers, however. Will they please take "he" when written in this offer to mean "he or she." Some of the very best letters and articles published in Cage Birds have been from the pens of our lady readers, and we should not like them to think we are leaving them out of the present offer.

The prize of half a guinea for the best answer to the question, "What is your favourite British Finch?" is awarded to Mr. Harold Freeman, 4, Clovelly Avenue, Nicholson Street, Hull, for his letter on the Linnet on page 463 of last week's issue.

The awards in our Six Guineas Competition will be announced next week.

Please accept my thanks. You can't think how surprised I was when I got my Cage Birds to find my Goldfinch on the front page, writes Mr. M. J. Griffin. The likeness is simply perfect. He is the best coloured bird I think I ever saw; he came from somewhere in Oxfordshire. He has been shown three times, and each time he has been first, and if he shows the same amount of cleverness when facing the judge as he did when three old hands tried every wile to make closer acquaintance with him for the first time, he will capture many more red cards for his devoted owner.

A Sparrow Story.

The instinct or some other equally well-concealed power which enables birds to convey to their fellows a note of warning of possible danger, says "A. N." in the Manchester City News, was strikingly illustrated recently when I placed a wicker-woven Sparrow trap baited with hempseed and bread for the especial alluring of the parent birds with hungry families at home on my windowsill. In the first half-hour four were caught, and vast crowds outside awaited admission, I killed three and one escaped, and the crowds vanished and never a Sparrow came near me again. The warning had spread far and wide, for in the grounds of our club I met with no success; but the steward is a bird lover, and will harbour Magpies, to the detriment of Thrushes and Blackbirds, so I am not certain that he may not have lent a helping hand to the interned ones.

I must express my regret, writes Mr. M. S. Runchman, that owing to my leaving home at the time you were good enough to put the portrait of my cinn. marked Yorkshire on the front page of Cage Birds, I neglected to write and thank you for so doing. However, I should like now to say that I much appreciate your kindness, and was much gratified to see my favourite bird occupying that coveted position. I thank my friend, Mr. Norman, for the excellent likeness he made, and I hope he will think some of my youngsters (of which I have something over 50 this year) worthy of the same honour when they come on the show bench.

A Tribute from Wales.

Kindly accept the best thanks of the Porth and Rhondda Valleys C.B.S. for the excellent report you gave last week of our first open young bird and British bird show, writes Mr. A. H. C. Legg, asst. sec. Although the entries were low, we have only ourselves to blame; we should have advertised our show in Cage Birds to a greater extent than we did. Advertising for one week, as we did, is not good enough, but I venture to say if we are spared next year, and the times are better, we will have a good show.

SOME HINTS ON MULE BREEDING.

By WM. ARMSTRONG (Dundalk).

AS a mule breeder for the past few years I would like to state some things that may be helpful to novices and amateurs. First, in choosing a British Finch for muling, take my advice, and get a bird, say, about two years old; I mean an old bird taken between October and March. Never go in for Greypates or branchers; if you do you are only looking for trouble.

In mule breeding always remember the saying, "An old dog for the hard road." Providing you have got your bird, let him run with a few Canary hens now and again; never mate him to one. Give him a big, roomy cage, and feed him on the best until you have got him in "proper condition." These two words reveal the secret of Mule and Hybrid breeding, for it is at this point where so many fail.

In reading Cage Birds during the past few weeks I have been greatly struck by the above words, "proper condition." I mean the writers, practically all of them, attribute their success to having the cocks in good condition.

Secondly, never mate or pair British birds as you would do Canaries; get them into breeding condition first. Never let them run together until you see the hen calling, and then only if the cock is in proper condition.

Fanciers may ask how they are to know that. Well, there is only one way to know it, that is, by examination of the vent. Don't judge a bird by his song or anties, or conclude he is ready just because you happen to see him wanting to feed a hen; such birds only raise false hopes. The best Mules I ever reared were from a Goldfinch that never sang or displaced his wing or tail feathers.

A few years ago I thought over how a stud of dogs or horses was bred, and the conclusion I came to was that it was simply by knowing the proper time, and mating them at that time.

I would advise novices to start with a Linnet, as he is very easily got into condition, and will breed freely with two or three hen Canaries if properly handled. It annoys one to see stated sometimes that he is a sulky bird. This is far from being the ease.

Another thing I find is that a Finch wanted for hybridising is better mated to a dark green hen Canary first; anyhow, this is my system of working them, and I find it mostly works to success. Really, I think fanciers should make more use of British hens than they do at present.

I need not go into details of preparing hens, as most fanciers know enough about that, but to help the novice or beginner I will tell him not to start till about the middle of May, and to finish in August.

I always give a young Canary hen, or a hen I buy, a nest of Greenfinches first to rear. When she has got three or four young ones reared there is no fear of her being a bad feeder or a sweating hen. Another item I may mention is that from the time incubation starts to the end of the season I give chickweed daily.

Young Mules I feed from the first day on hard-boiled egg and biscuits, well sprinkled with maw seed, and once a week until the end of the moult I give bread and milk well covered with maw seed. Young Mules leave the nest at fifteen days, and at twenty-five days are doing for themselves. As a final word, give your birds all the attention you can, and success is sure to be yours.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long, practical experience. Terms moderate.

THOS. BENNETT, Judge of Cage Birds; life experience; terms moderate; 14, Cumberland-rd., Lidget Green, Bradford.

J. W. BRUCE, Coldstream. Judge of all varieties of cage birds; Border and British Bird specialist. Terms moderate.

W. A. COWGILL, 115, Washington Street, Girlington Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

GEO. GARDNER, 11, Haverstock Road, London, N.W. Judge of all kinds of Cage Birds.

G. HOBBS, 35, Queen's Road, Northampton, having retired from business, can judge Canaries and cage birds. 40 years breeder and exhibitor. Terms moderate.

J. HOLROYD, 27, Kingswood St., Gt. Horton, Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

J. R. HOUGHTON, 21, Hatfield Road, Gloucester; judge of Canaries and Cage Birds; specialist in Norwich; terms moderate.

C. A. HOUSE, Briardene, Idle, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and other Cage Birds.

J. W. METCALFE, Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool. Judge of Cage Birds, Specialist Yorks. and Norwich; terms moderate.

W. MUNDELL, 6, Carlisle Place, Manningham, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds.

H. NORMAN, The Eyrie, Salisbury Road, Carshalton, Surrey. All varieties of Cage Birds. Specialist Hybrids and British Birds.

J. PATTERSON, Chirnside, Judge of Cage Birds; all varieties. Wide, practical experience. Specialist Border Fancy Judge.

J. H. PAYNE, 17, Northgate Street, Gloucester, Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Cage Birds.

C. E. SILK, The Aviaries, Emsworth, Hants. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Life experience.

JAMES STANGER, 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, Co. Durham. A.V., Spl., Nor. and Cr.

HENRY TAMS, Orchard Place, Longton, Staffs. Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Birds. Twenty-five years' Breeder and Exhibitor.

S. TICKELL, 22, Honey Street, Bodmin. Judge of all varieties; specialist Norwich, Cinn. and Liz. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. VARDY, The Aviaries, Hucknall Huthwaite, Notts. Judge of all varieties; specialist in Norwich Plainheads. Life experience. Terms moderate.

J. WILCOCK, The Fountain Inn, Eccleshill, nr. Bradford. Judge of Cage Birds, all varieties.

J. WALSH, Bird Specialist, Blackburn. Judge of Cage Birds all varieties. Specialist British, Foreign, Mules and Hybrids.

C. WILSON, 14, Frizington Rd., Frizington, Cumberland. Judge of Mules, Brit., For. Specialist, Brit., Mules. Life experience; terms moderate.

W. YOUNG, 25, Grosvenor Road, New Brighton. Judge of Cage Birds. Life experience. Terms moderate.

The London "Daily Graphic" of Aug. 1 reproduced photographs taken at the Zoological Gardens of a very wide-awake Lion and a forlorn looking "Eagle," which, by the way, was a Vulture. The inscription reads as follows:—"The lion and the eagle at the Zoological Gardens yesterday illustrated the recently-used happy phrase of a famous French writer who spoke of the awakening energy of the British lion and the drooping of the Prussian eagle." The sentiment is all right, of course, but the Vulture in the photograph was having the time of his life, and was simply revelling in his "place in the sun," which is so much the desire of the Prussian Eagle, but which is certainly not materialising.

Fieldfare or Missel Thrush?

Referring to the reported nesting of the Fieldfare in N. Wales, the "Manchester City News" says "Further details of this interesting event are anxiously awaited. What is the nest like and what the colour of the eggs? It is said that the eggs of this bird have been found on the ground in England in late spring, but the nesting of the bird in this country has hitherto been unheard of. In Norway it is said to build in colonies. The proximity of this nest should enable the naturalist to obtain a photograph of it and of the birds. Of course that would not be conclusive evidence that no mistake has been made, but it would stimulate our curiosity."

Few of us have ever seen the nest and eggs of the Fieldfare, for it is not given to many to have the opportunity of nature study in the northern countries in which the bird breeds. Neither are detailed descriptions common in books on British birds, but we believe that both nest and eggs resemble those of our Blackbird. The nest, however, is usually placed in a high tree, and the eggs vary considerably in their markings, some being very heavily marked, and others nearly unspotted. The eggs of the Missel Thrush, of course, are very different from those of the Blackbird, as they are greyish in ground colour instead of greenish blue.

The Essentials of Aviculture.

By J. W. N.

A Series of comprehensive articles, which will embrace the proper management of all kinds of birds in captivity. The housing, feeding, general management, diseases, breeding of species and of Mules and Hybrids, and finally, the birds themselves will all be treated of as the series progresses.

FOR larger birds, such as Thrushes and Blackbirds, cages such as the following have been found best: 26 to 28 inches long, 16 to 18 inches high, and 11 inches wide. Anything less than this should not be employed except as a very temporary abode. The wires should be of stout gauge and about ¾ inches apart. If the bird is newly caught this is too wide as will be testified by the loss of feathers on the forehead and damaged bill.

The construction is exactly the same as the stock cage for Finches, but the drawer will have to have a deep china dish for the food. As many of these birds have the habit of throwing their food about, the best way perhaps if the bird is not intended for show, is to have it outside; certainly the cage will be cleaner. One perch can be placed higher than the other to let the bird have more exercise, and this is a very important feature in birds of this class.

For small softbills a cage of the same dimensions as the Finch cage will suffice. To supply these birds with food the plan usually in vogue is to have an earthenware or china dish fixed by a loop of wire to a small hinged door in the front of the cage. This is a very neat arrangement, but, if the method used for large softbills is simply reduced in size, it will be found equally serviceable.

About Breeding Cages.

Breeding cages are in one, two, and three compartments. For a single breeder the Finch cage dimensions can again be used. The nest may be let into a platform of wood at one end, running from the back to the front on a level with the cross bar, but all sorts of positions have been advocated at one time or another. A door should be placed in such a position that there is easy access to the nest, and another one below can be used for the bath, etc. This cage will require an egg drawer, which may be fastened under the lower door or to slip between the wires.

The double breeder should not be less than 30 inches long and the more inches beyond this that can be given the more useful will this type be, as it can be used as a flight after the breeding season. To do this the wire or wooden slide dividing it into two is removed. The fittings are exactly the same as the single breeder.

The three compartment cage is one of the most useful to the breeder. As with the double breeder, length is a good speculation, as this is an ideal cage for storing young, moulting numbers of birds, caging off a sick or refractory member from the remainder, to say nothing of the advantage of being able to run two hens with one cock. Mule breeders especially will find this type a paying investment.

An extension of this idea has taken the shape of the 6, 8, 12, etc. compartment cages. Those are in reality simply double or treble breeders joined together. They are extremely useful where space is limited, but they rather lose points in the ease with which they can be cleaned. Breeding cages are best supplied with sand trays. These have disadvantages as mentioned before, but the cage can be cleaned with the minimum of disturbance to the birds, and this is a matter of vital importance.

To Beautify the Birdroom.

The finishing off and colouring of cages is very much a case of individual taste. Again uniformity should be the aim, and, although this is not possible with the inside, yet it should not prove difficult where the outside is concerned. Paint, stain, enamel, and distemper are all used, and where the wood is itself a thing of beauty, this is polished.

If paint is required to dry with a glossy surface, add linseed oil and a small quantity of varnish, but if a dull surface is preferred, turpentine alone should be employed. Enamel, though more expensive, is an ideal finish. It is easily used, looks well, and can be washed time and again. This latter quality should recommend it to all who appreciate cleanliness, and, although it is apt to chip off occasionally, yet, if a good quality be bought and properly applied, this seldom happens. Staining to imitate different woods is effective, especially if French polished; and distemper is very useful provided it is done sufficiently often. Whatever method may be adopted it is always a good plan to have the outside a dark colour and the inside to harmonise with the colouring of the inmate, and also to show the plumage off to the best advantage.

I have purposely left the show cage to the last, as this type is much better bought from the makers. They can make it much neater, lighter, and better finished, and it certainly pays any exhibitor to spend a few more shillings and have a cage that will not detract from the merits of the bird.

A Model Birdroom.

The aim of all aviculturists who have a number of cages is to have a model birdroom. The ideal from the point of the inmates is one in which light, air, warmth, and cleanliness are all combined. As the conditions were necessary in a cage, they are even more so when it comes to dealing with a number of cages.

If the room be indoors, it has the advantage of warmth, as a room over the kitchen will be found to be quite sufficiently heated. For the majority of breeders an artificially heated room will seldom be found necessary, except when dealing with very highly bred Canaries, or with the more delicate foreigners. More important than heat is the avoidance of draught, and the keeping of the room at an equal temperature.

If heating be found necessary, then the open fire is undoubtedly the best, provided there are no birds uncaged; otherwise it seems to have a fatal fascination for them, and there is little hope of saving a bird's life if it has made acquaintance with fire. The second best way, but the most expensive, is to have a system of hot water pipes, with the boiler outside the room; this is almost as good as the open fire, and leads to a more equal temperature.

All other means, such as lamps and apparatus for fitting on to a gas jet, should only be used in an emergency, and for a short time. Birds are peculiarly sensitive to impure air, and many of their respiratory diseases are directly attributable to the use of these means for promoting warmth.

The advantage of an outdoor bird room is that it is usually built to the owner's requirements, and hence the fitting up is easier to arrange. Whatever type one decides on, choice should always be given to one facing South. Here one gets the maximum of sunshine with the minimum of cold, but it is surprising what can be done with the most unpromising aspects if the staging for the cages is judiciously arranged. If the room gets too hot in summer, a shade placed outside the window will help to keep it from getting stuffy.

The easiest and most efficient method of ventilation is to have a window open top and bottom. This allows the cold pure air to enter the room at the bottom, whilst the warm vitiated air passes out at the top, and to avoid strong currents of air entering the room, a slide of perforated zinc should be placed in front of the openings. Always remember in fitting up stagings to avoid, as much as possible, placing these in a direct line from the window to the door, or window to fireplace.

The Decorations and Fittings.

If the floor be stained with potassium bichromate dissolved in water, and then polished with beeswax and turpentine, the birdkeeper need not pay more than 1s. for covering, provided he can spare an hour or two for polishing. To my mind nothing looks so well as this, but linoleum does excellently; it is easily cleaned, but is more expensive.

Strips of tin nailed all round the wainscotting, taking in about three inches of the wall and the floor, prevent mice getting in, and, if these animals are a nuisance in an outdoor aviary, they are trebly so in a bird room. The walls can be distempered with any colour that is fancied, a pale blue makes a very pleasing background to the cages, and, if the floor is polished as described, the two will harmonise splendidly.

In regard to fitting up the birdroom, the owner has to consider whether he intends it to be an indoor aviary, a room for cages, or both. If both, then the one side can be given over to the aviary whilst the other is used for the disposal of the cages. An indoor aviary is fitted up in exactly the same as the outdoor one, so far as the essentials are concerned, but, of course, it is impossible to have numbers of plants growing, so a few twiggy branches may take their place.

The more usual use for a bird room, however, is for stacking cages, and these have to be arranged so that one may be pulled out without disarranging those in the immediate neighbourhood. Where shelves can be put up, these are the most substantial and look best, provided they are stained the same as the floor.

Where damage to the walls, involved in the erecting of these, is prohibitive, cage racks will have to be provided. These are long pieces of wood the width of a cage, erected in vertical rows, the distance between each row being determined by the length of the cage. The height of the cage is marked off by little strips of wood running from back to front, and so providing rails on which it can be slid out. The staining and polishing of these racks may also be done with the potassium bichromate and beeswax.

In fitting up the bird room one should not lose sight of the many compartment cages. Where space is limited they are undoubtedly very valuable, although they take longer to clean, and are not so easy of manipulation. They have the advantages of the three compartment breeder, as mentioned before. Then every bird room should have at least one large flight cage. This can be made to the size of the available space, and thus fill up very usefully some vacant corner.

Whatever type of cages the bird keeper has, however, he should always stage the lowest a clear two feet from the floor. This is a point lost sight of by many, but is vital from a hygienic point of view. A useful method of staging is to have the lowest row for freshly caught birds, the rows on a level with the face for those training for exhibition, and the upper ones given over to the larger birds.

"Cage Birds" Plates as Wall Pictures.

The enthusiast who has all the outsides of his stock cages treated with the same colour, and in the same way, has ample satisfaction when he comes to fit up his bird room. With the scheme we have given of dark polished floor and light blue walls, a dark colour should be chosen, black being especially effective. The insides of course must differ, but this does not matter, the different colours can be grouped together, and the general colour scheme does not suffer.

The decorative scheme has so far been considered from the point of view of artistic effect and cheapness, but many other little additions will improve this. Pictures of birds, preferably of the coloured plates of CAGE BIRDS, are most suitable, being pleasing to the eye, and at the same time very instructive for purposes of comparison. The large ones can be hung in any available wall space, while the smaller variety look well between the rows of cages. This is certainly the best position if one is studying type.

As neatness has been our motto throughout, it would be a great pity to spoil things by sticking the pictures on the walls, instead of hanging them properly framed. Again the cheapest and most artistic methods coincide. Get a piece of glass cut to the size of the print, a piece of cardboard of the same size for strengthening the back, and bind all together with "Passe-partout" paper to be bought at any stationers. Before the war the cost of framing a picture one foot square in this way would have been about 3d. Further decoration can be supplied with ferns and flowers in pots, only do not overcrowd. A few well placed are all that is necessary.

Sundry Necessaries.

In fitting up our birdroom and considering the decorative scheme we have seemed to pay small attention to many necessary articles, and this will now be remedied. The first of these necessities is a common wooden table which is an essential in every birdroom. It should be kept scrupulously clean. If the owner likes he can cover it with linoleum or American cloth, which is washed after each day's work.

On the floor at one end a small dustbin or large tin box can be set, to receive the refuse and scrapings of the cages. This should be removed every night and replaced when needed. The breeder will require also an egg mill and seed crusher, these can be fixed on to the other end of the table. If this is set against a wall, the tools necessary may be stored in a rack made to hold them and screwed on just above it.

Some form of cupboard large enough to store baths, empty cages, and other paraphernalia is almost a necessity, but if these are placed on an empty shelf and a curtain fitted in front, they will not become unduly obtrusive.

For holding seed in large quantities a new sanitary dustbin is excellent, and for smaller amounts biscuit boxes serve the purpose to perfection. To prevent those spoiling the whole appearance of the room, they should be painted some dark colour and neatly labelled, or else hidden away from sight. To complete the furnishing, all that is now needed is a thermometer.

Sometimes the birdkeeper has a large room at his disposal, and is inclined to spend many of his leisure hours there. In this case one or two comfortable chairs and a small bookshelf to hold his books of reference, pedigree charts, etc., are welcome additions.

In concluding this chapter, let me recapitulate the conditions essential to the housing of birds, namely, light, air, warmth, cleanliness, and ventilation. Whatever original ideas the fancier may wish to carry out, let him see that they comply with these requirements and he need have no hesitation in adopting them.

THE "JENNY-WREN."

A Charming Picture by Mr. E. F. Bailey of a charming British bird that makes a delightful pet. The original of the picture is the very perfect specimen which has been exhibited with great success by Mr. John Frostick, Streatham.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

Correspondence.

A Cage-Making Query.

Sir,—In your issue of 5th August Mr. Henry Neve, of Heathfield, wrote an article on Canary breeding in which he advised making cages with three-ply wood. He says, "Make top, bottom, and back of three-ply and the two sides of deal or pine." I want to know if you could get him to tell me how to fix the back of the cage on to the top and bottom where the boards meet at right angles; the nails would not hold in the three-ply.

A Cheery Letter from Natal.

Sir,—May I add a word of tribute to the excellence of your paper! I feel sure that the majority of those interested in Canary breeding would rather pay an extra fee than lose the medium through which expressions of opinion can be voiced. Personally, though, so far, very little of your space has been devoted to my particular fancy, Rollers, I would have been exceedingly sorry if you had decided to discontinue the paper. May I add that I find the correspondence columns an interesting feature, which I hope will never fail.

You deserve the congratulations of all for the able manner in which you are urging the capture of the German Canary trade. Years ago there were imported into Natal, through Durban, large numbers of Roller Canaries, but local breeders quickly recognised the value of this trade, and commenced to breed in opposition, with the result that the German withdrew.

During the past ten or twelve years very few German birds have reached Natal owing to the fact that they can be and are reared sufficiently cheaply here to preclude competition from overseas. The same applies to the British Canaries. Another reason why the German trade no longer finds favour is that imported birds readily succumb to the climate; the utmost care is necessary to induce them to live, and this the average buyer is not prepared to give. Altogether the difficulties at this end have outweighed the benefits to the importer, and the local breeder is in a fairly unassailable position as far as song birds are concerned. I wish you every success in your efforts to keep out the Germans, more especially as the British Canaries are equally entertaining choristers.

The Norwich Canary Fancy in Ipswich.

Sir,—In your issue of July 22, there appeared an interesting letter from Mr. J. W. Gordon Stewart, in which he promises to do something in the near future to restore the Plainhead fancy to its former importance in Ipswich.

He further asks for suggestions, and in response, I would like to draw his attention, and that of others similarly interested, to the fact that since April of this year a new society styled the East Anglian Norwich Plainhead Club, has been in the course of formation.

The proposition originated with a propaganda worked by some of the more vigorous fanciers in Norwich, and has met up to the present with considerable and influential support. The object of the club is to supply exactly the material which Mr. Stewart requires. It will give support by way of patronage to important shows making an open classification in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and Lincolnshire. This means that any show being thus supported would benefit to the extent of receiving numerous entries from a wide area, and would be practically made secure from financial loss.

The members of the East Anglian N.P.C. would, in order to secure the points necessary to obtain the prizes offered by their own society, be compelled to exhibit at the shows patronised, and as there seems a possibility of the membership reaching something like a hundred in number, I suggest to Mr. Stewart that there is here an opportunity to be seized. All the members of this club will, by vote, have an equal voice in placing the patronage, and, as the area to which this organisation is confined includes Suffolk, there is no doubt that the men of Ipswich will, if they are wise, enrol themselves and secure the benefit of our support. I may add that our Secretary, Mr. R. Tomlinson, 17, Amptill Street, Norwich, will be pleased to answer any enquiries with reference to the club. Reports of monthly meetings are always furnished for publication in the columns of Cage Birds.

J. J. Smith,
Chairman E.A.N.P.C.

Do We Coddle?

Sir,—Re my last letter as to the success of Mr. H. James, of the Brighton and Hove C.B.A., in having bred five varieties this season, viz., Goldfinch-Canary, Greenfinch-Canary, Linnet-Canary, Siskin-Canary, and Redpoll-Canary, I have now the pleasure of adding a Hybrid cross, namely Siskin-Greenfinch. Mr. James has already two of this uncommon cross, and the hen is sitting on another five eggs. In common with most fanciers, this lucky breeder has his time more than occupied with other business this season, and his birds have received less attention than usual, yet this luck in results. One is inclined to ask: Do we coddle and tend our birds in captivity too much?

Will H. Gibb,

New Secretary for Llanelly C.B.S

Sir,—I shall esteem it a favour if you will kindly inform your readers that I have relinquished my position as secretary of the Llanelly and Dis. C.B.S. owing to my inability to devote the attention necessary for its progress. My thanks are due to all the members for their kind assistance during my one year of office, and I hope they will give our new secretary every possible support. The society is one of the leading clubs in Wales, and it is necessary therefore that the members shall continue to work hard to keep its position and good name.

I can safely say that if we decide to hold our annual show again this season exhibitors may send their birds without fear, as we have a battalion of members second to none in the fancy. Our new secretary is Mr. Hy. Webster, Pottery Place, Llanelly, who will deal with all future correspondence.

D. H. Davies.

Bird Shows and the Amusement Tax.

Sir,—I have been instructed to write you on behalf of the Blantyre O.S. regarding the admission tickets to our annual show. We have subscription sale tickets, each member giving a cock Canary gratis. The numbers are drawn the night of the show. The tickets are sold sometimes two months before the show, and each ticket costs 3d. Most of the people who buy tickets never come to the show, so we want to know if we require to charge a penny tax on every ticket sold, or if we only require to charge the penny when entering the show. The majority of the people buy a shilling's worth, that is, four tickets.

Alexr. MacMillan, Sec.

It would appear from this enquiry that the tickets are really admission tickets for the show, although each ticket represents a chance in a draw or lottery. This being so, it is clear that, subject to any exemption which may be granted to the show if held for charitable purposes, as explained last week, the tickets would have to bear a tax, and be sold at three for a shilling instead of four. It may be as well to mention that lotteries of any kind are really illegal in our country, and societies that promote them are liable to prosecution.—Ed., Cage Birds.

The Breeding of Cinnamon Canaries.

Sir,—Will any reader of Cage Birds kindly tell me how to breed self Cinnamon Yorkshires? I am told that I ought to pair a self Cinnamon cock with a Green hen. I have tried with five pairs this year with the following results:—

No. 1 pair: Self Green cock with a Ticked Yellow hen. All the young ones were self Greens, a good grass green, and with no light feathers whatever.

No. 2 pair: Both self Greens; poor colour Buff Self Greens and Variegated Yellows all in the same nest.

No. 3 pair: A Self Cinnamon cock with a Cinnamon Marked hen with pink eyes. Four of the young were Cinnamon, and one Self Cinnamon. All were hens with pink eyes.

No. 4 pair: A Self Cinnamon cock with Clear Yellow hen. The young were all Clear Yellows.

No. 5 pair: Yellow cock with Cinnamon Marked hen, sister to No. 3. The young were all clear. Some Yellows and some Buff.

Would Variegated Yellows bred from two Green parents throw Self Greens if paired back to a Self Green? I have been using the Self Cinnamon cock during the last three seasons with different hens, but I have not yet got a young Cinnamon cock. All the young have been hens.

I should be very greatly obliged if a more experienced reader of Cage Birds could tell me how I could pair my birds another season to get Cinnamon cocks, either marked or self coloured.

Descriptive Forms Suggested for the Use of Vendors.

Sir,—I beg to forward a suggestion that you should print some forms in which particulars, descriptions, and essential details of birds for disposal could be set forth by fanciers, breeders, and dealers. I have found after three or four years at home, and in some considerable correspondence with other fanciers regarding birds for sale, that as often as not the most essential details of description, strain, age, condition, and health, etc., are left out entirely, with the result that, rather than carry on a further correspondence and waste time, one puts the letter into the wastepaper basket.

Such forms should have a ready sale, and be most useful to all fanciers, and with your long experience the particular details and kind of form required could easily be framed by you. I should be greatly obliged if you would publish this letter so as to get opinions regarding the suggestion.

"The Songster of the Night."

Sir,—I for one would like to thank Mr. Bent for his most interesting and helpful article which appeared in Cage Birds, Aug. 12, on the King of Songsters, the Nightingale. It will, no doubt, be of great help to many others besides myself. This is my first season at softbills, and I have made a start with the Nightingale after carefully studying this bird and reading as much about it as possible. I secured a nest of young, five in number, and have reared four out of the five, one being accidentally killed. They are now nine weeks old and nearly through the moult, and three of them are beginning to warble nicely.

Of all the birds I have hand-reared this year or for a number of years past the Nightingale proved to be by far the easiest. This is not what I expected, as I had expected to have much trouble and difficulty, but in this case none has been experienced. I have kept and reared almost every kind of British hardbill for many years, but none so easily as the King of Songsters.

Perhaps Mr. Bert would kindly give me his opinion or a few points, namely:—At what age may one expect hand-reared Nightingales to sing the full Nightingale song? Do these birds require a tutor to get all the notes? Is it necessary to colour-feed them for show? Does he, or anyone else, know of any success being obtained from a Nightingale and Blackcap cross? If so would he, or they, give their experience, and say how they were managed, whether in a cage or aviary?

I am seriously thinking of trying to get a Hybrid from the Blackcap and Nightingale next season. I thank you for past help which I have obtained on many occasions from Cage Birds. A. W. Meek.

In reference to his article of last week, Mr. Bent writes to say that "during the last half-century," should read "during the last twenty-five years."—Ed., Cage Birds.

Wake Up, Newcastle C.B.S.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Anxious" is a born humorist, he just writes as he talks "I hear." So "Anxious" was at the meeting when I was elected secretary, what an honour for the secretary. He is not telling the truth when he says I let someone take the position for the two days' show; ever since I was elected secretary I have done the secretarial work at our shows.

"Anxious" would be at the meeting, I suppose, on Thursday last, when at the commencement there were ten present, four who had paid their subscription, and six who had not; three of these paid at the close of the meeting. A minute passed on February 2, 1911, relating to the remuneration the secretary should receive for his services, £5 per year, was rescinded, the idea being to see how the finances were at the end of the year. It was asserted by one speaker that this minute was passed at the meeting when I was first elected secretary, and that that was how I came to take the secretaryship. I was elected on February 15, 1912, and this minute was passed February 2, 1911.

As regards "Anxious" being a champion, when I wrote "posing as a champion," I didn't mean exhibiting. I meant posing as champion for "last year's members." Glad to hear he is a champion, good luck to him, but he has not been very long in that proud position. He is now posing as a judge as well, so "I hear," perhaps he is selling off again. I wonder if "Anxious" is amongst those who have paid their subs., I think not. As regards the secretary carrying out Rules 5 and 6, if "Anxious" has any sense he would see why these rules cannot be carried out just now.

So there is another champion in the field under the nom de plume of "Observer." Strange how these persons cannot put their names to the letters they send for publication, it shows how very sociable they are.

The Keeping of Softbills.

Sir,—It was with much interest that I read the article on the Nightingale, from the able pen of Mr. F. Bent, and I might say it would do much to encourage the keeping of Softbill songsters if many more of such articles appeared in Cage Birds.

There appeared two or three items in Mr. Bent's article, that I should like him to answer, if he will, and this would be much appreciated by myself, and I daresay many other keepers of Softbills. Why add powdered cuttlefish to the bird's menu? Do insectivorous birds consume grit in their wild state? Why, in Mr. Bent's opinion, has hard boiled egg killed more birds than any other food? Re "ant eggs," I have seen them recommended as food, also an infusion of them for excessive fatness of insectivorous birds. I think, but I am not certain, that it was Bechstein's idea. A reply to these queries would be instructive. I remember reading an article in Cage Birds by that well-known expert on Softbills, Mr. Jeffreys, saying that he kept his birds for years on a diet of hard boiled eggs, boiled potato, and ant eggs. I am quoting this article merely to show how misleading it is to novices who read the two articles.

I trust Mr. Bent will give readers of Cage Birds a little more of his knowledge by replying to this, which, as I say, would be much appreciated by myself and I daresay many others.

The Cruelty of Closed Rings.

How it May be Prevented.

Sir,—A favourite Roller of mine, a dear little chap, has just lost a leg through the closed ring eating into the flesh, and partly into the bone, owing to the natural thickening and scaling of the leg, common to all birds at his age—five years. The toes were mortifying, and there was nothing for it but amputation. He now sits on one leg, with the stump of the other tucked beneath him, and looks at me reproachfully for having, after all these years, during which he has trusted me, and perched on my finger, served him this dirty trick. It makes me quite sad to look at him.

I am writing this letter in the hope that other fanciers will support me in a plea for slightly larger B.R.C.C. rings for our Rollers. A little larger ring would have many advantages, and I cannot see one disadvantage. First, it would prevent regrettable tragedies like the above. Second, it would mean less loss of young every year through being thrown out of the nest by the hen after ringing (the hen takes the ring for excreta and out it goes, with the young bird as well); for a larger ring would permit the young attaining an age of nine or ten days before ringing, and by that time they throw the excreta over the side of the nest, and this danger is over, the hen no longer searching the nest for the excreta. Thirdly, it would permit a more legible numbering of the rings than at present; and every fancier who, as show steward, has searched the present rings in the indifferent light of a winter show room will appreciate what a saving of time, temper, and eyesight this would be.

The rings need be only slightly larger than at present to encompass all these advantages. The rings on German contest Rollers which I imported before the war were slightly larger than ours, and the ring numbers could be discerned at a glance. Our present numbers on the rings are little more than scratches.

I hope that other fanciers will support me in this aim to get larger rings, for I am sure that many young birds would be saved every season by just a couple of days or so later ringing (at present I have often to ring at five days old), besides preventing the above-mentioned danger to old birds.

I have just examined the ring of another old Roller of mine (four years), and I find his leg has thickened so that one can only move the ring with some difficulty, and, to avoid it getting worse, I shall at once remove the ring from this bird, while it can be done with safety.

Do Wild Birds Poison Caged Young?

Sir,—As one who has had many kinds of birds brought up in the easy way of allowing the wild parents to feed them, I can endorse all that Mr. H. Hood writes on the subject in the article "Some Birds of the Garden," in Cage Birds, August 12. At the same time I think he omits two most important points in their management. The first is to see that the cage is protected from sun and rain. The second, and more important, to provide plenty of pure drinking water both inside and outside the cage. Ask a man who believes in the "poison" theory if he gave the birds water, and he is pretty sure to answer in the negative. The thoughtless creature put them into a waterless cage without cover; the sun scorched them by day; the cold rain drenched them at any time; they died, and their parents were blamed for poisoning them! D. G.

The Value of a "Cage Birds" Recipe.

Sir,—I have been reading a lot of advice lately on the treatment of our pets, but I have not seen much on the saving in the cost of egg food. Some time ago I read an article in Cage Birds, on egg bread, and I thank the writer for his advice which has meant a big saving to me as eggs have been so dear this breeding season. As directed in the recipe mentioned I used 1lb. of finest ground whole wheat meal flour to four eggs, at the cost of 10d., mixed well together, then baked for three hours in a slow oven, then cut up and let it dry. When crushed the egg bread is ready for use. I have found that it will keep thirty-five birds for a fortnight, twenty-five young ones, and ten stock birds, and from March to September this will have saved me about 13s. 6d., which I think will pay for the seed used through the breeding season. Then again, I read in a letter in Cage Birds, that eggs were too rich a food for hens, causing them to be lazy and leave their young. My hens have not fed better for many a season, and some of my young cocks are now under training; others going through the moult finely. I shall continue to give them this food about three times a week, and I should think if this feeds high-class Rollers it should prove all right for others. I have only lost two young on sticks, and if my luck continues I hope to advertise my stock later through your valuable paper.

G. W. Grimsditch.

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Wait and See," appears to think that I have said that big heads cannot be perpetuated by in-breeding. I did not say so. I only asked Mr. Crawhall for evidence that it was so, and he now states that he merely used the term, or the sentence, as an illustration. But if it is any satisfaction to him, I will take his word for it, and if I happen to be down Devonport way I will give him a call. Perhaps he will have one of those to spare which by manipulation and selection are growing tails at the wrong end. I wonder if he backs them into their show cages as the army transport do kicking horses.

My first letter, in which I manifested to "Wait and See" little or no experience, was not referring to my own experiences, but to results of other fanciers that have come within my knowledge—fanciers who may not have perpetuated big heads, and tails at the wrong end, by in-breeding, but who manage to keep at the top in the warmest of competition, by pairing birds of pure pedigree and blue blood.

I pointed out in that letter that fanciers of a certain school were in-breeding mad; that, according to them, there was only one road to success, and that by in-breeding; and I also pointed out that there was overwhelming evidence to the contrary. Winners have no doubt been bred both ways, and will continue to be so bred, but I would say that the best Norwich Canary that was ever bred (in the opinion of the leading fanciers) was bred from two entirely different strains. Your correspondent, "Invicta," would probably state that they were remotely related.

I have received many a letter since my advent as a controversialist in Cage Birds—some congratulatory and some otherwise, but I little thought that my pseudonym had been penetrated so far afield as the place from which I received one this week. It is curious how these things leak out, and how small the world is. Evidently we have mutual friends. I am referring to a letter I received from a fancier in the North who is personally unknown to me, but who is known by repute as a skilful breeder of the Norwich Canary, and who is too modest or too cautious to enter the controversy. Here it is:—

"Dear Sir,—You will be surprised to receive this letter from a total stranger to you, but I am writing to you in regard to your letters on in-breeding. (Here follows some remarks on myself and my writings on the Norwich which I am too modest to reproduce). I have practised in-breeding to a large extent, and still practise it, but only rarely, and I have had very similar experiences to some of those you mention. I found the faults in the birds came out in the young with much more regularity than the good points, and I came to the conclusion that it was no use in-breeding except your birds were tip-top. That was years ago, before I had the stock I have now, and I only practise it now occasionally and then with birds that are show birds. There is another point I would like to mention which I see you do not, and that is, I found the young from my in-breeding pairs were more difficult to rear. Have you found it so? I started the season with twelve cocks and twenty hens, and after a bad start, finished up with thirty-six young on the sticks, and a few late ones in the nest now. I hope your results are satisfactory."

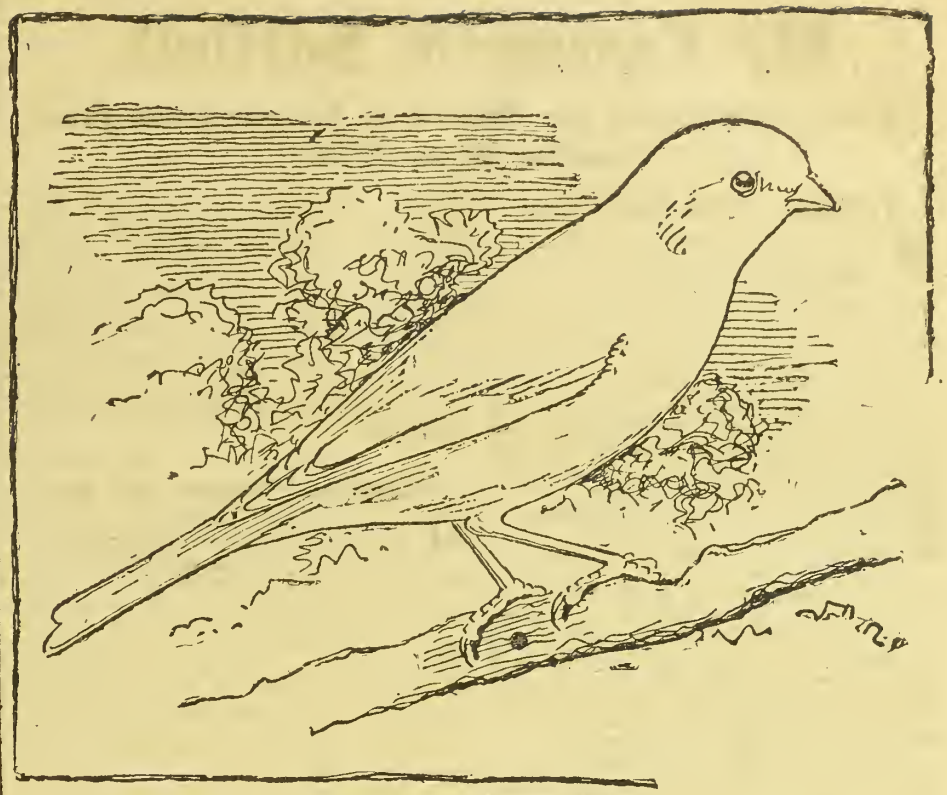
I might mention, by the way, that my results are not. Anyhow, it would seem from this letter, and from the experiences of other prominent fanciers, that in-breeding is not quite so prominent as its votaries would expect, and one point seems to be emphasised, viz., that only the best should be used, else one is going to do a lot of waiting, and very little seeing if one is out for champions.

Sub Rosa.

Sir,—It is now about five months since I purchased my first Canary and my advent into the fancy seems to have been attended by a considerable "splash." When I wrote my original letter to Cage Birds I never for a moment thought it would create so much interest and start a controversy which can do nothing but good if carried on in a perfectly friendly way. I open my Cage Birds every Friday morning in fear and trembling lest I should find one of "fors" or "against" indulging in personalities. You see I have been a "doggy" man for twenty-five years, I have bred pigeons and poultry also, and I know what fanciers are when they get at loggerheads—in fact, I wrote to Mr. Crawhall some time ago because he was so interested, and wanted some of my experiences in some of my other fancies, and I told him in my first letter that as we had our heads hard up against the brick walls of ignorance and prejudice it would perhaps be better to let the matter drop.

I think it a great pity "Sub-Rosa" gave up in-breeding at the penultimate stage; had he tried judicious crossing during one more season he would have done better, much better, provided of course he exercised ordinary care and selection in mating up his birds, and knew what he was breeding for, I know that, taking Norwich—I should go for skull first, with type, then try to get quality, colour, etc., later. I say skull first because you rarely get skull without size and, unfortunately, length.

Now it seems rather strange for a five month's novice to sit down and dictate to the "grey beards" of the fancy, but "Sub-Rosa's" contention notwithstanding, Mendel's laws of Heredity stand good whether you are breeding sweet peas, poultry, pigeons, or Black Angus cattle ("Angus Doddies" we used to call them in the county of Angus where I come from). "Like produces like," and related birds or animals have a higher potentiality for reproducing their "like" than those which are unrelated.



I do not pretend that all stock bred from related parents is perfect stock from a show point of view, but I do know that stock thus bred has a greater power of stamping its type and peculiarities, good and bad, on its progeny than does stock procured from unrelated parents, therefore I believe that by using related birds a breeder has a greater chance of breeding fine specimens, and I think the chances are as three is to one. Given time, patience, and careful selection, any given point can be produced, diminished, or exaggerated.

Now, with regard to size. You can in-breed for size just as easily and successfully as you can use in-breeding to reduce it where it is necessary. Take the Irish wolfhound for instance, it is one of the newest breeds, one in which huge height, bone, and strength are a sine qua non. If "Sub-Rosa" will look up a few Wolfhound, Great Dane, or Deer-Hound pedigrees he will find something to astonish him. Of late years the trouble of the Terrier men has been to keep them small enough for the bench in spite of in-breeding. A little judicious in-breeding and you get them what you want. I could go on adding instances ad infinitum, but "Sub-Rosa" can readily prove for himself that in-breeding, judiciously carried out, can be of use either to increase size or reduce it. I don't like the word "head," what you need is skull, "head" is misleading, as a bird which has a skull not much larger than a split pea with an abundance of feather on it is called a good headed bird by some fanciers. I prefer plenty of solid bone and little feather. I breed short faced tumblers so I know something about heads. I also breed Modenas, and the tendency of these is to be "snipy" in head, it can be, and is counteracted by in-breeding.

I agree entirely with what "Invicta" says in his letter, but I have never tried the brother and sister mating; I prefer father to daughter, or mother to son, but as birds stand lower in the vertebrate scale than the four footed species there is no reason why they should not be somewhat closer in-bred.

I have been to considerable trouble to verify the statements contained in this letter, and I do not propose to be drawn into a lengthy controversy on the subject. So far as I am personally concerned I do not propose to carry the correspondence any further. I wish "Wait and See" would send me his name and address. I am dropping the pseudonym "Bee Jay," and signing myself,

By PHILORNIS.

This familiar species is a favourite cage bird with many people on account of its handsome plumage, which may be made still more attractive by a little judicious colour-feeding.

The adult cock bird is seven inches in total length; the beak is brown above and horn-colour below; the head and a patch on the nape of the neck bright yellow; various dusky streaks on the forehead, lores, behind the crown, and at the edge of ear-coverts; sides of neck yellowish brown; upper portion of back and wings dark brown, the feathers having a broad edging of dusky yellow; primary and secondary wing quills dull black, the former with narrow outer edges of yellow, the latter with broad edges of chestnut, tertials and wing-coverts same as secondaries; chin throat and under parts bright yellow; an irregular line of chestnut descends on each side of the throat from the corners of the lower mandible; the breast and flanks are suffused and longitudinally streaked with chestnut; tail dull black, the middle quills bordered with chestnut, the rest with narrow yellow edges, and the two outer pairs with long white patches on the inner web; legs light brown. In winter the plumage is less brilliant, and much mottled with brown.

The female is paler in general plumage, and the under parts are more suffused with dingy brown. The young only acquire the bright yellow of the head after the first autumn moult; and the upper parts are dull green in colour, streaked with black.

The Yellowhammer is a late breeder, and consequently its song is heard long after the majority of other wild birds have become silent; it is therefore associated with the sultry days of July and August, and has a certain drowsiness in its tones which harmonises well with that season.

The nest of this bird is usually placed close to, or even on, the ground, in the shelter of a low bush or hedge. It is often found among the rank grass at the edge of a field, and is neatly made of moss, hair, and root-fibres. The eggs are white tinged with pale purple or sometimes yellow, and spotted and scrawled with dark purplish brown. The cock seems to take a share in the task of incubation, and one observer has heard it singing while thus engaged.

The young birds are fed mainly upon insects, and leave the nest when about a fortnight old. During the summer the adult birds also seem to partake chiefly of an insect diet, but in autumn the seeds of various weeds are consumed, among which may be mentioned those of Stellaria (Stitchwort), Polygonum (Knot-grass), and Arenaria (Sandwort).

As winter approaches Yellowhammers join together in small flocks, and appear in company with Linnets, Chaffinches, Greenfinches, Bramblings, etc., about farms and stackyards, and at that season feed to some extent on grain, but smaller seeds seem to be preferred when obtainable.

Outside the British Islands the Yellowhammer is found breeding in Sweden, and occurs still further north as an autumn visitor. It has also been observed in Russia, Western Siberia, Italy (chiefly in the north), and is well-known throughout the rest of Europe except in Portugal, the south of France, and the south of Spain, where it is comparatively scarce.

In captivity a newly-caught Yellowhammer should at first be fed on canary seed, crushed hemp, and scalded German rape in small quantities; a few mealworms and any insects procurable, may be given daily, also a small quantity of egg-food. This diet should be continued for a week or two, tho soft food, scalded rape, and insects being gradually withdrawn thereafter.

When the bird has become a little tractable and reconciled to its cage, it will do very well on a diet of three parts canary seed, one rape (dry), a little bruised hemp or sunflower now and then as a treat, and a mealworm or two occasionally to keep the bird in good form.

When colour-feeding, begin the soft food gradually, giving small quantities at first and slowly working up to the full amount and strength; finish off in the same gradual manner. For a Yellowhammer I like a cage about 15 inches long, 12 high, and 7 deep.

My Favourite Softbill.

Varied Opinions of our Readers in Answer to the Prize Question of the Week.

Faithful to his First Love.

WHAT is your favourite softbill? A rather delicate question for a softbill enthusiast to answer, but I must give premier place to our common Redstart. This bird has always been a great favourite of mine, in fact it was my first investment, and I often wish it was more generally distributed amongst us during our summer.

So far as my observations go it is by no means a common bird. It is shy and something of a recluse, and hence may often escape attention, but when once seen it is never forgotten. It is a summer migrant, arriving about the middle of April, and departing for Northern Africa—its winter quarters—about the end of August or early in September.

It appeals to me in many ways, one of which is because of its flame-coloured tail feathers. It is a rare treat to see it alight along some sun-lit hedgerow, spreading its tail fanlike in the act. Its plumage is of such a sober character that the lightning movements of the chestnut tail feathers are shown off to perfection, and cannot fail to attract attention and court admiration.

It cannot be said it is a great musician, some even assert that the song is monotonous, but to me there is no such thing as monotony in the avian choir.

The prominent tail feathers are responsible for many names to this bird—Red-tail, Fire-tail, Fire-flirt, Fiery-Brantail, and White-fronted Redstart.

My stock cage for a Redstart is 3ft. long, 18ins. high, 1ft. wide, with zinc drawer. I use a covering of pitch pine sawdust, and food and water vessels outside, and free use of bath; absolute cleanliness is essential to its well being.

This is my stock food, and I find it hard to beat:—Equal parts of best ants' eggs, best dried flies, and meat meal, one Osborne biscuit crushed up, a piece of York cheese, and a little grated carrot, all made moist with boiling water. I also lay in a stock of wasp grub in summer for winter use. For live food I depend entirely on maggots, and house flies.

Procure a good adult specimen from a catcher about the month of May; he will readily take to cage life; get him meated off properly, colour-feed during moult, and treat as above, and you will find at the end of the moult you will be the proud possessor of one of the most charming and delightful of our many British softbill migrants.

None so Good as the Blackbird.

OF all soft-billed birds none can rival the Blackbird with his jet-black plumage and golden beak. The best Blackbird to keep is the hand-reared one, for hand-reared birds have a smaller sense of freedom than wild-caught ones.

The best kind of cage is the box pattern about 36 in. long and 16 in. wide by 20 in. high. My cages have two doors, one in the front and one in the side. The door in the front is a sliding one. The cage must be well covered to protect against damp which is injurious to the birds.

The perches must not be less than ⅝ in. wide for "Blackies." Round perches are the best, and capital ones can be made from broom handles. The feeding of the Blackbird is an important point to be considered. My stock food consists of: one part each of crissel, ant eggs and dried flies. To this I add four parts of ready made Blackbird food, which can be obtained at all bird shops, two parts of Spratt's Dog Meal, two parts bread crumbs, and mix with enough water to make it into a crumbly state. I give them also plenty of luxuries such as beetles, caterpillars, worms, gentles (flesh maggots), pieces of apple, pear, plums, bananas, currants, blackberries, lettuce and freshly grated carrot whenever possible.

Do not overfeed the birds or they will become fat and spoil their appearance. Do not forget to give them a few mealworms and a snail daily. The drinking water should be changed twice daily. I place some Parrish's Chemical food in the water twice weekly.

Every afternoon, no matter what kind of weather, I give my birds a bath in a round tin about 3 ins. deep and 6 in. in diameter. To prevent the bird from slipping in the tin I place some pebbles in it. At present, my Blackbirds are in the moult, but that does not deter them from their daily bath, which they greatly enjoy. I do not colour-feed my birds as I think Parrish's Chemical Food is better than Tasteless Pepper.

As I stated before, hand-reared birds are the best. All my Blackies are hand-reared. I keep them out of doors in all kinds of weather, and they never suffer any ill effects. The cock Blackbird should have jet-black plumage, orange coloured beak, and ring round the eyes. The hen bird is browner in plumage. The head should be round and not wedge shape. The tail should be perfect, as the Blackbird has the habit of spreading its tail like a fan, and so exposing any faults in the feathering.

Search the wide world over, and you will not find a better soft-billed bird than the Blackbird.

Thinks the Thrush the Best.

OF all our British softbills the Thrush is my favourite; either in intelligence as a pet, in beauty of song, or in plumage, there are no birds to surpass it.

I have a couple of Thrushes at present, and this is how I keep them: I have them in cages, 30ins. long, 14ins. wide, and 22ins. high, with three perches about a foot distant, and a sand tray, made of zinc, in the bottom covered with peat moss about an inch deep. I clean the cages twice a week as they need cleaning out often if you wish them to look spick and span.

My birds are fed in the following manner:—4 parts crushed puppy biscuit, 2 parts ants' eggs, 1 part dried flies, as well as a little cold boiled potato, scraped carrot, cut up grass, and a little meat occasionally. Live food is given in abundance, as we have a garden, so that besides mealworms, the birds get slugs, snails, beetles, cockroaches, and other insects. I have also a stock of berries, such as haws and elder, and blackberries, wineberries, and other fruits are given when in season.

Many people neglect giving their birds a bath, and this is a great mistake, as birds cannot keep clean or in good health unless they have pure water. I always give my birds a bath every day in summer, and once or twice a week in winter, first thing in the morning, as they enjoy it more then. Rain water is far better than tap.

I let them fly loose in a room once a day for about an hour as they need a lot of exercise. Their cages are out in the open all day and night in all weathers, and the birds take no harm. So treated the Thrush is certain to keep in good health and be a credit to its keeper.

In Praise of the Bearded Tit.

MY favourite softbill is the Bearded Tit. These birds make most interesting pets, and the cock bird, if a good one, does well on the show bench. They live quite a long time in captivity, and as they grow older each moult seems to leave them a little lighter in feather. They are very fond of insect food, and the stock food must contain plenty of this. For myself I buy the best ready made mixture I can get, for I find this cheaper than making up the food myself. I moisten the food with a very little carrot, and I give my birds mealworms or other insects every day.

Bearded Tits are quite hardy, and they are better kept in a cold room than one which is artificially warmed. They are very fond of a bath, but I do not give one every day to my birds. I usually keep a few rushes in the cage, fixing them in a wire stand in the centre. They enjoy themselves very much in their sporting about these rushes.

Besides their ordinary stock food, and the live insects, I give them a little fruit such as apples, etc., which I fix in the wires. My cage for a pair is about 20ins. long, 16ins. high, and 12ins. deep.

When sending these birds to shows great care must be taken to avoid their contracting a chill, for if a bird has been kept in a comfortable room, and is then sent out in winter time to a bird show it is likely to go soft and catch cold unless the travelling case is well protected.

One Bearded Tit which I used to keep in my kitchen was, I think, the best of its kind I ever saw. It was finger tame, and when I showed it at Swansea it took the special prize for the best in the show, which I think is rarely done by a softbill. As he flitted amongst the rushes fixed in his cage he was a picture indeed.

To my mind there is nothing so pretty as a small Softbill class, and when I visit a bird show I always pass an hour or so in watching this one class, and although the hobby is rather an expensive one yet the keeping of Softbills will always be my favourite.

The Waxbills' Christmas.

By MRS. HAUTENVILLE COPE.

IT was a typical Christmas frost and snow, but custom dictates the spending of it in the country, and certainly London at the so-called "festivo season" is not desirable, so perforce we had to pack up and depart. Nine little Waxbills; rather a mixed collection. Conspicuously beautiful were the tiny pair of Orange Breast or Zebra Waxbills (Estrelda subflava)—a devoted couple, though they never exhibited any desire to nest.

A pair of Firefinches Lagonistica brunneiceps), the cock glorious in colour when bought in May; his hen, procured, or rather kept alive out of several, has been with him since September. A young cock Firefinch out of colour in May, in full beauty since September.

A cock Avadavat, who, judging by his colour, is about three or four years old, was in fine orange-red plumage from July to December; now he has only isolated orange feathers left to remind one of his past colouring. Two other Avadavats sold in June as a pair of Golden-Breasted Waxbills.

Lastly, an Orange Cheek Waxbill, bought in September. All these birds are tropical. The Firefinches, though imported by hundreds, are scarce as cage birds, seldom surviving the journey over many weeks; hence both delicate and unsatisfactory. All these nine birds had to brave Christmas in the country.

The Waxbills' Travelling Cage.

In the summer I invented and had made a special cage to take to pieces for travelling; to this I now added a wooden back and sides. The birds were transferred to a small 12in. by 9in. wire cage, and warmly wrapped round with a thick plushette cover secured with cloak straps, were jolted in cab, train, and carriage till they reached their destination

Out came the cage sections, out came the zinc tray; soon the edifice was joined together, and once more they were in their own cage, partitioned into two, I regret to say, owing to the vicious temper of old Ruby, as I call the cock Firefinch, whose spiteful manner to the younger cock causes him to deliberately pursue, fight and swear at the terrified little relation, who fain would seek safety in flight, and hides away in any convenient corner; this animosity only begins with the advent of the hen.

I have urged the necessity of sleeping places, so I put into practice my "idea," and with brown paper and small safety pins constructed rapidly some sleeping bags such as were described in Cage Birds some time ago.

I knew that in a big room well provided with doors and windows—tho latter facing due north—that the temperature would fall, that the birds in the confined space of a cage could not take exercise to keep warm, and that they must consequently feel the cold.

A small thermometer hung on the cage told me exactly the temperature by day; it registered 47 degrees. When the fire was lighted at about 5 p.m., and the shutters closed, the mercury rose, and in a couple of hours registered 60 degrees, sinking before daylight back to 48 degrees. The birds were all in perfect feather, tight, and trim.

Just a Bit Too Cold.

One day the thermometer descended to 45 degrees. Then I noticed all the birds were quieter and puffier, especially the Firefinches. All ate more than usual, but, being away from home, they had no tit-bits, only white millet, spray millet, and a little canary seed and poppy. At home they have small seeds in variety, ant eggs, and other items to vary the menu.

As long as the thermometer did not descend below 48 degrees the birds took their daily bath as usual directly the fresh water was put into the cage, but here I did not put them warm water, as I feared that might tempt them to take baths.

The Avadavats and the Orange Cheek all sat together. The Firefinch pair kept apart by themselves, as did also the Orange-breasted Waxbills. The latter spent most of their time in a nest place I had constructed out of the crown of an old straw hat. The cock flew in first, then rang out his faint song, like a far-away bell ringing; the note by which he called the hen up into the warm seclusion of the nest.

Orange-breasted Waxbills are kind-hearted little birds, albeit quite capable of self-defence, but they will share their nest with any lonely Waxbill, and I saw the young Firefinch received by them as a guest and allowed to go or come as he pleased; he never seemed to amalgamate with the Avadavats.

When one reads in bird books of heated aviaries and the necessity of a high temperature to keep so-called delicate foreign birds alive, I think this Christmas experience of my nine little pets will surprise many people who read it, and that it goes far to convince the observant that wrong feeding and sanitation are accountable for more deaths than climatic conditions.

I ought to specially mention that the bird cage is placed as far as possible away from the windows, and out of draught, and that the plushette cover is thrown across the cage to keep out draught, so that with a wooden back and one side, the light enters at the side, and by as much of the front as is uncovered by the plushette wrap.

The Firefinches sing a good deal every day; a feeble song, but strangely resembling that of the English Robin: occasionally an Avadavat lifts up its pretty voice. Considering that these birds come from very hot countries, it is surprising that they can stand the cold below temperate, i.e., 55 degs., but, curiously, during last year's hot summer I noticed that when it was over 70 degs. they seemed to feel the heat; the cock Avadavat used to sit and gasp for breath after 75 degs. was reached, and all avoided the direct rays of summer sunshine.

Moisture cools air, and Waxbills, in nature, frequent the water-holes, possibly spending their days among dense foliage, bathing more or less all day in very hot weather.

Firefinches Fearless and Familiar.

I love the Firefinches—they are such fearless little things, coming to the side of the cage, chirping back in answer if you talk to them, and when let out of the cage flying on or near those who minister to their daily wants, for they discriminate between friends and strangers.

I wish I could afford to import Firefinches, or that I could have some featherless, sickly specimens to experiment upon; it is a delight to see the new feathers quickly coming; to see the dishevelled, miserable bird daily improving into a resemblance of its beautiful self; but these delights are reserved for those with long purses and large aviaries. If birds look out of condition, it is their owner's fault. This I have proved conclusively.

A Book for Bird Lovers.

A Bird Calendar for Northern India. By Douglas Dewar. (W. Thacker and Co., Creed Lane, Ludgate Hill.) Price 6s.

AT sight of the title of any modern work on Indian birds one instinctively looks for the name of Mr. Dewar on the title page, and when it is found there is a guarantee as to the contents of the volume.

Mr. Dewar has a style of his own, and a delightful one, too. The solid pabulum conveyed in his writings is presented in such a manner that we have no idea of its solidity; we imbibe the knowledge as we would drink a cooling draught, and any one of his books once taken in hand is put down with reluctance. Even if one has the opportunity of reading it through at a sitting, one regrets coming to the end

This latest work, in spite of its somewhat uninviting title, is no exception. The very word calendar seems to carry a "cut and dried" suggestion, but there is nothing of the cut and dried nature in this charming book.

Take the opening paragraph for instance: "Take nine and twenty sunny, bracing English May days; steal from March as many still, starry nights; to these add two rainy mornings and evenings, and the product will resemble a typical Indian January." We have here the key note of the whole work, brightness, and whether the author is referring to the varying characteristics of the months as they come along, or to the birds which are nesting during each month, the brightness is sustained throughout.

The book is worth reading if only for the many items of general information to be found between its covers. For instance, one learns from it all about the "osprey" trade, and the methods adopted by the natives in obtaining the plumes; the construction of the wonderful nests of the Baya, the Tailor-bird, and many others; the artful tactics employed by the Koel cock in enticing away the Crows from their nest, while his mate deposits therein her own egg and removes those which rightfully belong there; the courtship, breeding, and plumage changes of all the birds of the Northern Provinces, and a host of other knowledge.

To the keeper of foreign birds the work is indispensable. It tells him the scientific name of every bird mentioned, describes its eggs and its nest, its movements throughout the year; in short, all there is to know about it. The value of the book is enhanced by a copious index which affords the means of quickly tracing the year's life of any of the birds which come within its scope.

By the REV. C. B. JOLLIFFE (Cardiff).

On June 20 the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe put a question to the members of the Cardiff C.B.S.: "What Advantages can the Society offer its Members?" The lecturer proceeded to answer his own question, and in doing so pointed out methods which should appeal not only to the members of his own society, but to those of every other in the Kingdom. By the courtesy of the Rev. Mr. Jolliffe we are enabled to reproduce the lecture for the general benefit.

MAY I appeal to the old member, ripe in experience, who says "they have nothing to teach me," to remember the many things he has learned from others, and in the harder school of personal experience, and come away from his leisure and his birds and give to one and all what he can contribute to the real benefit of our Society and the Fancy.

I am conscious that I have said little about the British section and Mules and Hybrids. A wise man only speaks of what he knows, and I know so little of this section. I am anxious to learn, and when I look upon some of the beautiful colours of the Chaffinch, as I have seen them in Oxfordshire in March, I should like to know how to produce these in November and in captivity. I hope someone will come forward with the desired information.

We come now to some four or five things all of which I think will commend themselves to most of us as things our society can do for its members, and which, if properly organised, will go a long way to make it financially attractive to a great number of people who at present are isolated bird-keepers.

Why Not a Thrift Society?

In all probability the main numerical strength of our membership, like all other C.B. societies, is composed of working men. To my mind this is one of the many beautiful features of the Fancy. You are on your way home with a lovely bouquet of flowers in your hand, a present for the wife or sweetheart (may she be both), when a poor dirty little street girlie call out: "Give us a flower, Mister!" Instantly you class that child with the beggar. That is your mistake. Her eye has seen the beautiful in the flower, and it is the soul of the artist within her that causes her to cry out.

Just so with the genuine lover of birds. The business of Canary breeding is merely incidental: the soul of it all is the love of nature. Removed as men are, in town and city life, from the freedom and beauty of the country, the soul in them cries out for the things that move, and sing, and express themselves in lovely forms and colours.

If the good wife wishes to bring the good man home from his work at top speed, and to keep him there, let her take a deep interest in his hobby. If it be birds, I am sure she will not only, as a sweetheart, have set her trap and caught her bird, but, as a wife, will have found a nice cage in which to keep him.

If there is no mutual hobby, and the man does not clear out after tea, it may be as I once heard of a Wiltshire woman saying to an enquirer: "You want to know what my husband is. Well; when he goes to the Conservative Club he is a Conservative; when he goes to the Liberal Club he is a Liberal; and when he stays at home he is a darn'd nuisance!"

How It Would Work.

Now there are not many working men who take their wages monthly or quarterly, and who are in the habit of handling £10 to £30 in lump sums. They are paid weekly, and their savings are made weekly or not at all. A man will read in CAGE BIRDS that a certain firm is offering giant Spanish at 32s. a cwt., carriage paid. He reckons up that at 4½d. per lb. he pays £2 2s. for his cwt., or if he can manage as much as 2s. 6d. for 7lbs. it still comes to £2 per cwt. Naturally he wishes he had the 32s. to spare, and thus knock off 10s. per year in the cost of his birds. Can the society help him?

Before answering this question let me give you another illustration of how the working man is handicapped, taken from a case related to me. There was a beautiful specimen of a Canary (Yorkshire or Norwich I know not) standing 1st in an open show, and catalogued at 50s. A working man hurried home from his work that day, swallowed his tea, and made a bee line for that show, almost as rapidly as he walked to work in the mornings. His trained eye spotted this bird, and he mentioned the matter to the secretary. "Six p.m., laddie, is the time limit for making claims." He only had a sovereign, and went here and there outside the show, among his friends, in order to raise the other 30s. Back he goes hot foot to the show, but it is now 6.30, and to his keen disappointment the bird had been claimed and paid for.

How could the society help a case like this? If you had asked the man's wife how, out of her small weekly allowance, she was able to pay 36s. for a ton of coals, or a like sum for a really decent pair of blankets, her answer would have been "thro' my thrift society." Gentlemen, why not have a thrift society among our members, into which every member could pay 1s. per week, and at the psychological moment, when he most needed it for his hobby, could come to the secretary and ask for it? No need then for a member to go round with nervous and reluctant feeling to raise the wind, but with a fine manly sense of independence, and with a "joy unspeakable," as he looks at his handsome purchase, he would be able to exclaim: "Mine, and paid for!" The details of organisation I leave to the executive, but I am confident the suggestion is worth considering.

A Co-operative Suggestion.

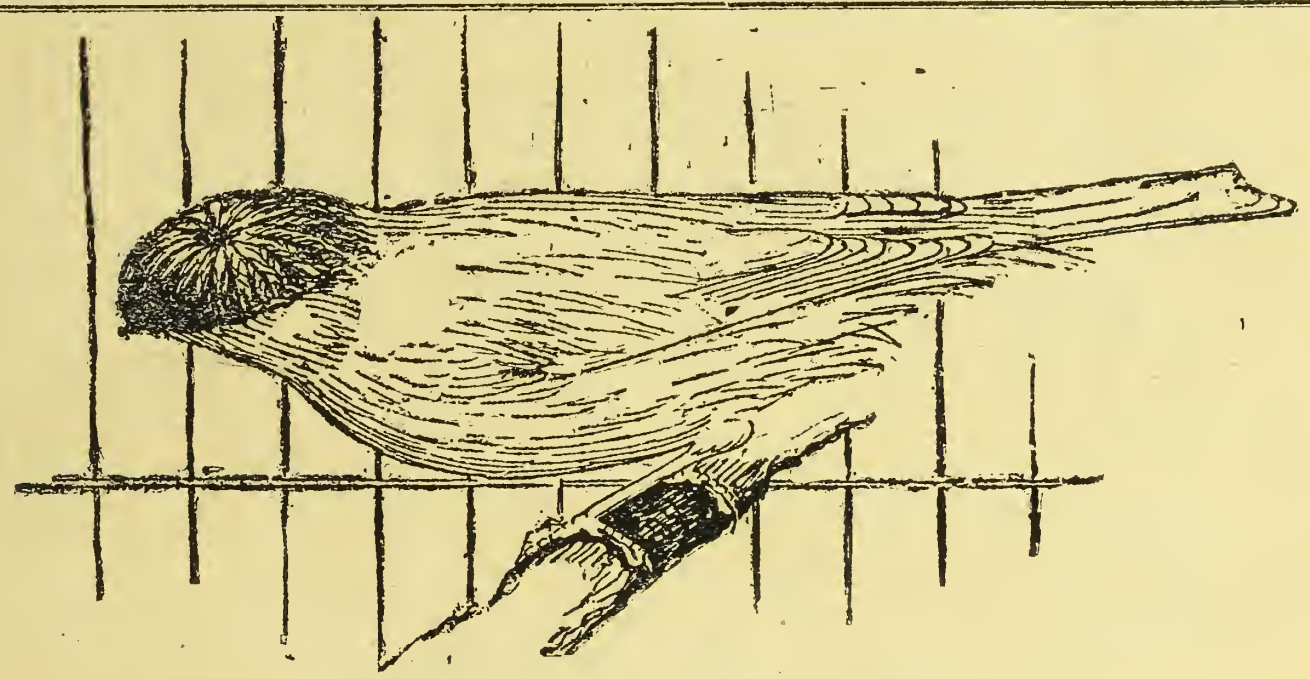
This matter of purchasing leads me to another suggestion. It must be apparent to us all that whilst we meet together as a body to consider many things concerning our birds, we do absolutely nothing to help each other in the matter of lessening the cost of maintenance.

If the average cost of each bird is now about one penny per week, and we have an average of about 25 birds all the year round, the cost to us annually is about £5 5s. If we can reduce this by £1 1s. we shall be able to prove to every would-be-member that he is getting 21s. for 4s., which puts Mr. Lloyd George's famous 9d. for 4d. into the shade. Permit me to show how it can be done.

For the sake of illustration I will take an average fancier; we suppose he needs annually about 1 cwt. of giant Spanish, costing £2; 14lbs. of rape, costing 5s.; 28lbs. hemp, costing 10s.; 28lbs. granulated biscuit, costing 8s. 6d.; 4lbs. of red pepper, costing 8s.; total, £3 11s. 6d. I confine myself to these five requisites, though I do not overlook eggs, inga, maw, linseed, nesting bags and felts, etc., etc.

Compare these prices with the prices advertised in CAGE BIRDS, for equal quantities, but sold in the bulk, i.e., per cwt:—Spanish, 32s.; rape, 4s. 2d.; hemp, 8s. 9d.; granulated biscuit, 6s. 9d.; pepper, 4s.; total, £2 15s. 8d.

This means a saving of 15s. 10d. on five articles. But, observe that all the above prices are retail. It is my idea that at least 40 out of our 60 to 70 members would combine together, so that we could purchase our stuff at wholesale prices, or at least at a figure much lower than the lowest advertised prices.



Supposing we put it at a most reasonable figure, viz., 10 per cent. off. Now multiply the £2 15s. 8d. by 40 members and you get a total of £111 5s., and 10 per cent. off this sum comes to £11 2s. 6d. Divide this £11 2s. 6d. among 40 members and you an individual saving of 5s. 7d. Add this 5s. 7d. to the 15s. 10d. saved from the usual purchase price, paid by the working man in his weekly purchases, and you have a total saving of £1 1s. 5d. per member per annum. I am persuaded that this is inducement enough to any wise man to join hands with us in our already progressive and strong society.

Now let us consider one or two objections to this scheme. There are members of our society in the seed business. Would it be fair to jeopardise their livelihood for a purely mercenary purpose? To this I would answer: Give them preference over everyone else in this matter. Let them have the first opportunity of quoting prices. An order for two tons of canary seed is not going to be lightly dismissed by the biggest firm in the kingdom. As to outside seed merchants in the city it may be the means of compelling them to join our ranks for the purpose of availing themselves of the most favoured party clause in one's proposals.

How will this affect the specials at our shows? I am afraid the seed merchants of Cardiff are not greatly struck with the bait of offering seed specials to our members, though I am one who once won a half-cwt. to my great encouragement. The special is one which does not do the seedsman all the good he anticipated. If he limits it to a certain district of the city it does not appeal to all the members of our society, and if he places no geographical limitations on it it may be won by a member living at the other end of Cardiff, whose only interest in this particular shop is in the fact that he has to apply for his special in person. I would meet any loss on this head by making a levy on each member availing himself of this co-operative principle, of 1s. towards these specials to members exhibiting at shows.

How are you going to distribute the seed? I believe large firms are willing to make up the order in hundredweight and half-hundredweight bags, and consign the same to A., B., and C., care of the secretary. If the firm receiving our orders is situated in the city, that firm can and should deliver direct to the members. Anyway, in the hands of our capable executive this scheme could be put into working order, and the executive could be held responsible for the quality and guarantee procured by our expert committee.

A Story of a Tame Greenfinch

By MRS. M. J. PARKER (Hailsham).

SOME time ago I sent you my experience of a tame Chaffinch, which I reared from the nest, whilst living in this country town, and it has struck me that it might interest your readers to know of a similar experience that I had with a Greenfinch years ago in London. I notice that two or three writers lately have told about the extreme tameness of the latter bird when their owners take the trouble to pet them.

Some years ago, whilst on a visit to Colchester, I found a very late nest of Greenfinches (I think it was in August). There were two young, and I reared only one, and as I returned to London before the bird could feed itself I used to take it about in a tiny all round wire cage, when going out to tea, etc.

I believe from the colouring that bird was a hen. She became so perfectly tame that a great part of the day she was flying loose in the room, but on no account would she go into any other cage than the absurdly small one I reared or rather fed her in, though I provided her with a nice, fair-sized one.

I intensely dislike the cruelly small cages I see some poor birds confined in, but as my pet spent a great part of the day out of hers it did not matter. I had several birds at that time, but she would not look at them, except, I used to fancy, with scorn.

Why I am sending you this account is because I have wondered at times if it did now show a reasoning power that we do not give birds credit for. I lived at that period with my grandfather, who night and day was under the care of a kind and experienced nurse. He used to get up late in the morning, and after the exertion of being dressed always had a small quantity of wine, and a large soft biscuit. Now the bird was particularly fond of that, and as soon as my grandfather began eating she flew on to his hand and liberally helped herself.

At times this was not approved of, and she was flicked off with his pocket-handkerchief, but that did not trouble her at all, for she used to cunningly slip down on to his knees (where I could not help thinking she knew he could not see her) and would reach up to the biscuit from underneath his hand that held the biscuit, and eat as much of it as she desired. I knew he was quite unconscious of her presence then, and I have always thought she knew that as well as I did.

In the morning at about breakfast time she, as a rule, perched on the curtain rod over the window, and when my brother came down he used to stand in the middle of the room and keep cracking his fingers at her. She never could resist the challenge, and down she would come on to his arm, and then would enter a little sham fight with her beak and down his arm.

Pretty regularly every morning, also, she used to fly up to my bedroom when I went to make my bed, and we used to have the same game together before anything else could be done. An experienced bird fancier told me that had she been allowed to fly out into the garden she would have returned, but living in London, I never ventured to try such an experiment.

She possessed her full share of mischief, for I used occasionally to wear a small necklet of fine plaited pearls, and if she could manage to get on to my shoulder she would only for the pleasure of cracking one or two of the beads, before I drove her off. I believe she loved to hear the crack, as some humans do with a nutshell under their foot.

I think you will agree with me that Greenfinches can be trained to be as faithful, and nearly as intelligent, as a dog. They are very healthy birds. I never remember my pet ailing anything up to her death, which unhappily occurred through her pecking a coloured candle in my bedroom, whilst I was away on a visit.

I should like to say that every week I eagerly look in your interesting paper, CAGE BIRDS, for other bird lovers' experience and I should like to know what they think of the reasoning powers of the bird creation.

HOW BIRD SOCIETIES CAN HELP THEIR MEMBERS.

YOU will observe that I am looking upon our Society as a Brotherhood of Fanciers handed together not only for mutual encouragement, but also for practical help. It ought to be our supreme duty to see that none leaves our Society for the sake of the cheery word and ready sympathy which from time to time one and another may need.

I have been much attracted by the suggestion first started in CAGE BIRDS at the commencement of the war that when our soldier fanciers come back from this terrible and tragic conflict, they shall find true friends in the fancy. But why leave it to the generous few to give a pair of birds? Why not begin at once and open a Friend-in-need-Section of our Society?

We can pass round the hat at our monthly meetings and a penny per month from our sixty members means £13 per annum. With this the Committee could purchase a few good pairs of birds so that our warrior chums might have a good start again. Remember some of these men sold up at a day's notice, and birds which went for 5s. each cost them £2 and £3 each to procure. This would be "keeping the home fires burning" in a decent wholesome fashion.

There are other needy cases which should appeal to us, men who fall ill, some who get out of work, others who have bad seasons, and still others who have the worst of bad luck. These all need putting on their feet again.

I have been impressed by the many who write me from all parts of the Kingdom, who from one cause and another are in danger of dropping out of the fancy and who plead for a chance to get started on the good way again. It is not easy to dismiss these cases by saying—where are the members of the Society in your district?

If every Society in the country had this Friend-in-need-Section we should have one answer to all such, viz:—Why do you not seek the good offices of your Society? We have always done something in a haphazard fashion for the chap who is "down on his luck," but it is so much better to organise these things, set them on a permanent basis, and be ready against the day of need.

What an Advice Committee Could Do.

From time to time we hear of men, usually novices, who have had a glaring fraud perpetrated upon them. Recently in CAGE BIRDS there was a letter headed "Ever been 'Ad?" The writer appealed to fanciers for some suggestion as to the best method of purchasing birds with a decent measure of assurance that, so far as the beginner is concerned, the dishonest and fraudulent practices which are apparent to the matured hand should be prevented.

It has occurred to me that if a small Committee of competent and expert members, say three or four members to each section, Norwich, Yorkshires, Borders, British, etc. were appointed by the Society to act officially as an Advice Committee, to some extent these injustices could be prevented.

Let me explain. A novice finds he is hopelessly outclassed, and is prepared to spend £5 on a pair of birds. As a novice, the chances are that he is wholly incapable of judging a £5 pair of birds. If he is offered for £5 what is not worth more than 25s. on face value; if the birds are five, six, or even seven years of age; or if something is wrong with the birds' general health, the probability is he will not perceive it. The expert committee would give its advice in all things but pedigree. Here it cannot say "yea" nor "nay," and in this matter it cannot fix the value of the bird or birds.

Again, the purchaser may not like to disclose the price he is prepared to pay, or he may be unwilling to name the source from which the birds are supplied. To that extent he limits the value and service the Advice Committee can be to him, had he given the fullest confidence he would have reaped the highest benefits.

Notice how the position of the seller is affected by the existence of this expert Advice Committee. The novice writes to an advertiser stating the fact that the bird is to be submitted to the Advice Committee before the deal is closed. What happens? If the bird is blowing, tail-wagging, wheezy, scaly-legged inner coverts dropping down, or, in the case of a Norwich with an extra length, the tail has been sand-papered down; in a word, if the bird is possessed of any defect, or has been subjected to malpractices discernible only to the practised eye, the chances are that the would-be vendor is not going to send it out, or, if he does, he has the grace to state its deformity and put down the price accordingly.

In nine cases out of ten the usual message in answer to a reply to an advertisement of this character will be "Sorry the bird is just sold; shall be having more in a few days and will write you." He never does write, for he is not going to face the Expert Committee. The novice he could manage alone, but the novice plus the three "old hands," are too much for him. Even "old hands" may be caught napping at times, but the chances are that the novice will reap the benefit ninety-nine times out of a hundred.

The Expert Committee will give its advice free, and if the novice pays on the value assessed by the Advice Committee, say 1s. in the £, the proceeds can go towards the funds of the Society, and it will tempt the Advice Committee to keep the valuation up. If the novice has been asked less than the assessment then he can pay up with a beaming countenance, concluding of course that he has a good bargain.

Now that one is dealing with purchases through the medium of adverts., it may be as well for me to say that in my opinion neither seller nor purchaser should use the name of the Committee or Society as a guarantee of payment. If the purchaser has not sufficient confidence in the seller to send the full purchase money before receiving the birds, then let him use the deposit system operated by CAGE BIRDS, which, to my mind, is the fairest and soundest system known.

Personally, I never send out birds without receiving the agreed price as deposit. In the event of the purchase being completed, I pay all insurance and the purchaser all carriage; in the event of no purchase all monies are returned less the insurance of the birds. But, even so, I much prefer the deposit system with the Editor of CAGE BIRDS.

In order to prevent the idea that the Advice Committee should be used only for purchases made through the medium of adverts., I wish to say it is my intention that, no matter the source or medium of the purchase, the Committee should act if desired, the purchaser obtaining a voucher from the Secretary, and in the event of no purchase being advised by the Committee the transaction to close on the payment of 1s., if a purchase be effected the poundage to be as above.

My Favourite Finches and How I Keep Them.

By T. PARGETER (Banbury).

MY favourite of all British Finches is the Goldfinch, and I think this bird is the most popular with others besides myself. I feed my Goldfinches as follows:—I use good canary seed as staple food, and about twice a week I give a mixture of hempseed, maw, niger, teazle, and gold of pleasure.

Besides these, I give seeding heads of such wild plants as I can gather, especially thistles, hardheads, teazle, shepherd's purse, etc. Treated thus, I find my Goldfinches do very well and keep in perfect health.

The Bullfinch is another favourite of mine, and is even more simple to cater for than the Goldfinch. Its main food is plenty of good sound canary seed. I give no hemp, as I think this seed is very detrimental to the Bullfinch.

I give plenty of green food, almost any kind that is in season, especially groundsel, the heads of which they are very partial to. Fruit of any kind in season such as raspberries, blackberries, privet berries, and elder berries should always be given, and the seeds of dock, plantain, and nettle, also the ash keys which grow in bunches on ash trees.

The Linnet is a favourite with many, and this bird also is easily catered for. I give mine as a staple food simply sound canary food, and sprinkle the cage bottom with waste seed from threshing boxes. This can be got for the asking in most cases. The favourite green food of the Linnet is groundsel and chickweed.

The Chaffinch is not at all difficult to keep, and is very prettily marked. A good canary seed and the wild seed mentioned for the Linnet will serve as staple food, but the Chaffinch should have also a little live food, flies, mealworms, etc. He does not take quite so readily to cage life as the three birds already mentioned, but his beauty and plumage when he is once set repays for all trouble.

One of the simplest birds of all to keep is the Greenfinch. It should be fed on canary, white sunflower seed, and a little hemp. Green food, of course, such as groundsel, chickweed, the seeding heads of cornflower, and the seed pods of winter greens. The waste from the threshing boxes, as for the Linnet and Chaffinch, is also advisable in the keeping of the Greenfinch

The Redpoll is a charming little bird as a pet, and requires only the same treatment as the Linnet. It soon becomes very tame and is one of the easiest of all birds to reconcile to captivity.

The Yellow Bunting, although not so generally kept as the others above mentioned, is a splendid addition to any collection. Most Yellow Buntings are difficult to steady, but when once tamed become charming pets. I feed mine on Spanish canary food with an occasional mealworm, and I give also spiders, flies, moths, and other insect food.

The Bramblefinch is another very pretty bird, he also is one of those which is somewhat difficult to accustom to cage life. He should be fed on canary and the wild seed from the threshing box as in the case of the Linnet.

The Hawfinch is the largest of the Finches, and, although he has no song, he makes a nice pet, and is easy to keep. He requires as food only canary seed, hempseed, white sunflower, and safflower. He is very fond of green peas, and these should be given him as long as they are in season.

Whatever birds are kept, it is most necessary that they should be in cages affording plenty of room for exercise, and if they are kept in an aviary the aviary should not be overcrowded. The bath should be given at any time, and as long as the birds take it they are doing well.

Britain's Goodly Heritage of Songsters.

By "RAMBLER."

THE song of the Thrush is the favourite music of our country, as well-known as it is dear to all who have the opportunity of listening to its strains. Amongst all the ranks of our feathered musicians we cannot find a bird whose melody is so pleasing and varied as that of the "Throstle." His notes may be said to be almost endless in variety, each note, seemingly uttered at the caprice of the bird, and without any perceptible appreach to order.

The Song Thrush warbles throughout the day, but morning and evening are the times when his melody seems at its best. When at the dawn of day, the first streak of morning appears glimmering over the eastern horizon, and surrounding objects are beginning to assume a more decided outline against the grey morning sky, you will be greeted with his first few notes. Gradually they swell into a lovely song, which is carried half a mile or so along the valley by the gentle zephyrs of early morn.

Or should his morning melody not suit your convenience, pay his haunt a visit when the sun is nearing the western horizon, and hear his requiem to the parting day. It may not please so much as his morning song, for then there is a freshness and vigour throughout all animated nature that probably gilds his performance with a higher charm and lends it an additional sweetness. Still, its rich modulation, its infinite variety, and its soothing strains will give unspeakable delight. Listen, then, to its sweetness till the evening has wrapped the woods in gloom, or the night mist creeps round the hills, hiding the speckled songster from your views; for he will warble so long as the last streaks of day are visible.

A Rival of the Nightingale.

But darkness does not always stay his music; and at midnight, notably in midsummer, when the dawn is spreading almost as soon as the twilight leaves the western sky, he will sit and warble, too. There is no monotony in the notes of the Song Thrush; they are for ever on the change; and when the birds are numerous and full of song, the effect produced is indeed a grand one, and far beyond the art of the most graphic pen to describe.

The song of the Blackbird is first heard in the latter part of February, and continues with undiminished power till the end of May. His notes are on the wane throughout June, and in July his mellow pipe is hushed during the autumn moult until the advent of the following spring. Though rich and full in tone, it possesses little variety; but still the Blackbird's melody is amongst the finest music of all known birds; for what it lacks in variety is made up in compass and richness of tone.

Early morning, about sunrise, and after five o'clock in the evening, in the latter part of April, are perhaps the times the Blackbird's powers of song are heard to the best advantage. On the topmost twig of some lofty oak, or hid away amongst the foliage of the lowest branches, he will sit in the dusk of the early morning and warble his wild flute-like song, which floats gently on the still cool air, as he greets the now glowing eastern sky, and later the rising sun. Then again in the evening he sings as loud and full as in the morning.

Although the Blackbird warbles his delightful strains at all hours of the day, still it is in the morning and evening that the lover of nature can pause and listen to the bird's wild strains in fullest enjoyment; for he strives his best to herald the approaching day and sing its requiem in his choicest tones.

The Skylark has no great variety of notes, his compass is small; nor are the notes either powerful or rich in tone; but he pours forth his song so industriously, so continually, and arranges his notes so harmoniously, that the songs of few birds are listened to with more pleasure. The song of the Skylark is pre-eminently cheerful; and if the monotony and continuousness of the music reminds you of that of a bagpipe it has at least no melancholy in its tone; it is not continued for so long a time as is generally supposed, ranging from two minutes to a quarter of an hour.

The Linnet's song is heard most frequently in early spring. Then very often the males of a flock will warble in chorus from a tree top, filling the air for some distance around with their melody. Perhaps the Linnet's song is best heard to advantage, however, when the flocks disperse, and each pair is engaged in domestic duties. Then, it may be in some dense mass of furze bushes, a low warbling song may be heard proceeding from a cock Linnet sitting on the topmost spray serenading to his mate. The song is not very loud, part of it is somewhat harsh, but it is varied by those low melodious notes which make this species so popular with the bird fancier.

The Bullfinch's song, which is usually uttered in a low tone as to be scarcely audible at a distance, as if he were fearful of being discovered in the act, is very pleasing and mellow. The Bullfinch is in great request as a cage bird, from the readiness with which it will learn to whistle various tunes, and from its docile and confiding disposition.

The Chaffinch is a lively bird, and rarely fails to attract the attention of even the most casual observer, as it either sits on some exposed twig and rattles off its merry laughing song, or mayhap as it flits along the hedgerows.

Early in March, when the pale primroses are peeping from under the withered leaves, and the hawthorn shows the first signs of verdure, the song of the Chaffinch assists in welcoming the advent of spring. At this season it is the life of the woods and groves, almost the only music the boughs afford.

The song of the Chaffinch is short and even monotonous compared with that of many other birds; still there is a freshness and sprightliness about it that well makes up for its lack of melody.

The Robin's Plaintive Music.

The Robin is one of our few perennial songsters, and warbles incessantly throughout the year, except for a few weeks in autumn while undergoing his annual change of dress. We have scarcely a bird in Britain that possesses a song so rich and plaintive as that of the Robin—a song that has so peculiar a charm as to border on sadness, especially as it greets the ear in the decline of autumn when the year is fast dying away.

There is nothing particularly sweet in the Yellowhammer's strains, but there is something about them that has a great charm in the opening year, and lends a sense of life to the surrounding scenery. The song consists of one note repeated several times in quick succession, concluding with two others drawn out to a considerable length.

The Yellowhammer is a most pertinacious songster; what he lacks in quality, he makes up in quantity, and throughout the summer his music is heard in untiring strains. No other bird, save the Robin and Wren, sings so late in to autumn. He commences early in February and continues in song until September.

Like the Robin, the Wren is also a perennial songster. With the exception of a few weeks in early autumn, during the moulting season, its loud carol may be heard at all times of the year. In spring when all nature is full of life and vigour, the Wren's wild lay is prominent amongst all the bird songs, as it pours from the little creature buried and unseen in the dense growth of sprouting ferns, of anemones and graceful bluebells.

In summer he warbles at all hours of the day. In autumn amidst the showers of falling leaves, his melody, like the Robins, is almost the only bird music we hear, and in winter his song is just as cheerful amongst the icicle-draped roots and snow-covered branches as it was amongst the flowers of spring and summer.

The song of the Wren is remarkably loud for the size of the bird, and is composed of a series of jerking notes followed by a rapid trill, the whole abruptly terminated as though the bird had been frightened.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

LEEDS.

Open Linnet contest, Clarence Hotel. Tbough many birds are in the moult, 14 birds entered, and we heard some good singing. 1, Wigfield; 2, 3, Binns. Judges, S. Butterfield and Huchinson.—T. C. Summers, Hon. Sec.

Linnet contest, Glassmaker's Arms, Saville Green, Aug. 6; 24 birds sang: 1, Shaw; 2, Playforth; 3, 4, dead heat, Marshall, Butler. Judges, C. Biss, W. Wheelbouse. Aug. 13, 15 birds; 1, Marshall; 2, Watson; 3, Thompson. Judges, J. Smith, W. Lacy.—W. Lacy, Sec.

BARNSLEY.

Dove Inn. Linnet contest, Aug. 13, under a very good company, for 4min. time sing: 1, Hardman, 2min. 46sec.; 2, James, 2.44; 3, Fishwick, 2.12 Night sweep: 1, Fishwick, 2min. 25sec.; Hardman wins £1 bet with 2min. 3sec. Open contest, Melbourne Hotel, Sheffield Road, Aug. 9. Landlord will give 10/-; and Mr. J. Norburn will give a special. First bird in window at 3.30.—J. Hardman, Sec.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

COLOUR-FEEDING YOUNG (Major).—Provided you use only pure tasteless pepper, without any admixture of natal, or hot pepper, the young in the nest would not take any harm from your supplying colour-food to the cock which has begun to moult and is still helping to rear the brood of young. But if you could depend upon the hen rearing them by herself, or if the cock ceases to attend to their wants, as he may very likely do, you should remove him to a cage by himself to "feed" and moult him properly. Whilst not harmful to the young under the conditions named, colour feeding young in the nest is rarely profitable.

DOUBTFUL SEX (Ignorant).—I should be strongly inclined to think the bird is a cock, especially if the throat throbs very perceptibly when it is singing and the song is anything more than a mere scrappy performance; and to test this you should have mated it with a known hen in good breeding condition to see what the result would be. But it is too late to do this now this year, so you will have to wait until next spring, when, if the doubt continues, you would do well to try this plan for the first brood. It is quite possible for a cock to rear young birds that are given to it. It is a thing that has been known to occur on many occasions.

GONE WRONG ON FEET (Hardee).—It is quite possible for trouble with the feet, such as you describe, to be hereditary in a strain, but, of course, no one can say that this is the case in any particular occurrence, if one knows only the immediate parent, and that is a newly-acquired specimen which shows no trace of the trouble itself. If the trouble were inherent in the strain, it is not essential to its transmission that the specimen should be affected itself. Try what the following treatment will do for it in a month or so. First of all put in cage one moderate-sized perch, of a nearly round shape, and another thin one, about the shape and out very little thicker than an ordinary lead pencil. Then get two saucers and fill one with fairly hot water, but well below scalding point, of course, and the other with cold water, and dissolve a good teaspoonful of common salt in the cold water. Catch the bird and immerse the affected foot, or feet, in the hot water for a few minutes, then at once transfer it to the cold saucer for a similar length of time, then back to the hot for a minute or two, and again to the cold. Repeat this five or six times, and be careful to finish in the cold water. Dry the foot, and gently rub all over with some Jeyes' veterinary ointment. If small corn-like callositics form under the scales, as may happen, they may be removed by a vet., but the cure depends very much upon the extent of the mischief. Repeat the bathing and anointing mentioned above every second day for two or three weeks, as may seem necessary, and then leave the perches to complete the cure in the course of Nature, which will probably take a few months.

DISAPPOINTING (Three Bad Bargains).—(1) The Yorks cock may be troubled with overfeeding or may be a weakly specimen that has passed the zenith of his fitness. In any case, try the following course of treatment. As staple diet give plain canary seed only, and in addition give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, rape and teazle, and on the alternate days give just a pinch of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame, in the egg-drawer. Give liberal supply of green salads or such things as plaintain stalks daily. Also offer the bath daily. In the drinking water add ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, every second day for a week, and after this give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. (2) Treat this hen the same as No. 1, with the exception that instead of giving the gentian tonic at the finish, give five drops each of oxymel of squills, tincture of lobelia, ipecacuanha wine and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a fortnight. If wheezing is not then quite stopped omit the medicine for one week, then resume it, and give it again for another fortnight. (3) I cannot confirm the statement that this hen is suffering from liver trouble without full particulars about her, and especially as to the condition of the droppings and bowels. Try the following treatment for a month, and if not then better write again and give the fullest particulars. In addition to the above seed dietary, give a morsel of bread and milk twice a week, and sprinkle it each time with a pinch of maw. In the water give the lemon juice and salts mixture as above for a week, and after this dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in two tablespoonfuls of water; add a crystal of sulphate of iron half as big, and when dissolved add six drops of dilute sulphuric acid. Give this mixture in place of pure water for drinking every second day for three weeks. Do not attempt any more breeding this year. Next season, if not already past the period of their usefulness, the hens may show better results, but if you know that they are now several years old, you would do well to discard them for any further breeding.

RAPE AND DIARRHŒA (Crest).—The specimen of rape sent is not the genuine summer rape, which is of a more reddish tint. The kind sent is often sold as summer rape, and its only bad point is the one you have found out—that it is very relaxing. If you cannot get the reddish-brown seed you would doubtless find this answer very well if you give it separately mixed with equal parts hemp, broken groats, and chopped sunflower seed. Otherwise give it in such quantities as will just serve to keep the bowels normally free. To remove the excessive looseness, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake well dusted with carconate of bismuth and sprinkled with maw seed, and add to the water six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of opium daily until it is stopped. The above feeding will obviate the necessity for giving mixed seed daily as you rightly wish to avoid doing.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

PROCURING LINNETS (Hilda).—Undoubtedly the best time to purchase Linnets is directly they are through the moult, say, the month of October. Before the war one could occasionally get hold of a few branchers that made good cage birds. These had not moulted, and the doing so in confinement caused them to settle down quickly, so that they were no trouble during the winter. Your best plan would be to visit one of the dealers in your city and select a couple of bold-looking birds, that are not too wild. See that they have nice clean feet free from scales, as these are generally young ones.

FEEDING A HAWFINCH (Dollie).—I am glad to hear you like the paper, and I expect in time as you read about different species you will be extending your collection. The greatest secret in keeping a Hawfinch in good health is variety in diet, and with your garden and surroundings this should be no trouble to you. His principal food should consist of good sound sunflower, a little linseed, canary, rape, and sometimes wheat, dari, oats, and small maize. Then at odd times you can offer him beechmasts, plum and cherry stones, hawthorn, privet, yew, and other wild berries, also various nuts. They are not particularly keen on green food, but will sometimes nibble a little chickweed, shepherd's purse, groundsel, etc. A little fruit should be offered, such as ripe apple and pear. Green peas they are particularly fond of. You need not depend upon mealworms; small caterpillars, beetles, gentles, etc., will answer the same purpose. Keep the bird in a cage large enough for him to exercise in, and give the bath frequently. See that he does not catch cold, as these birds are rather susceptible to this complaint.

FINCHES FOR MULING (Mrs. M. W. J. Orme).—Questions relating to Canaries and British birds should be sent on different slips of paper. The most popular birds for Mule breeding are Linnets and Goldfinches. These make handsome birds and are good songsters. You should procure the cock birds in the autumn and let them fly with the hen Canaries during the winter months to get used to each other before the breeding season. (2) I do not think you can do better than send to this office for our Nutshell booklet on the Skylark, post free 2½d. You will find in it full directions for making suitable food for this bird, or you can get a pound of insectile food and feed him on it, mixing with it a portion of scraped raw carrot or boiled potato. He should also have a little mixed seed, and any insects you can collect for him.

All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MOULTING A GOLDFINCH (A. B.).—As a rule Goldfinches are not difficult birds to moult. The real difficulty is to moult them so that they are fit for exhibition soon after they are through. Now, in a wild state, a Goldfinch is well up in colour directly he has put on his new plumage. Of course, the colour is not equal to that of the spring, but still it is richer than on birds moulted in confinement. The two factors to this end are food and fresh air, and these should be imitated as closely as possible when moulting exhibition birds. The food can be had in abundance for those who are in a position to collect it. Thistle, teazle, knapweed, grass, and a host of other seeds can be gathered on any waste ground, and should be given freely, in addition to the usual mixed seed. Greenfly and small insects should also be offered. An abundance of fresh air and the daily bath are both absolutely necessary to success.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING BLUE-FRONT (Cerebus).—I do not think there is much wrong with your bird. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the water with chemical food. Give ripe fruit daily, also nuts. Probably a change of seed mixture might benefit him. Give him some other seed preparation, otherwise feed as usual. Do not omit to keep grit (Parrot grit), cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood, for it to exercise its mandioles upon continually in the cage. Treat as above for a month and then report progress.

PURCHASING A PARROT (Neuadd Aber).—(1) Both of the dealers you name have been regular advertisers in "Cage Birds" over a long period, therefore their transactions presumably give, at any rate, average satisfaction. More than this I cannot say in this column. (2) I will place the birds in order of merit: Grey, Amazon, Indian; the two latter are hardier than the Groy, and a good Amazon is a very interesting and amusing bird. The present is a good time to buy. (3) Grey, £5 to £15; Amazon, £3 to £10; Indian, £2 to £5. The price varies acording to talent. Cheap birds are mostly newly imported, and may or may not have commenced to talk.

BUDGERIGARS NOT BREEDING (Esperance).—I certainly am not impatient and am only too pleased to help "C.B." readers as far as possible. Some failures are almost impossible to account for, and yet they occur, in spite of correct treatment, thorough cleanliness, and every care. I think I would try another hen, and then, if you get no luck sell out in November. Do out your aviary thoroughly, and in the spring make a fresh start. If you have to do this, apply to me per the Editor I will do my best to put you in the way of getting breeding stock. Judging by your various letters, your failure has not been for the lack of careful or correct treatment, but rather the perversity of individual birds. Many Budgies are bred in aviaries no larger than yours, out the more space they get for wing exercise, the fitter and stronger they are likely to be, and consequently the more rosy the prospects of successful breeding. After carefully reading through your letter, I cannot give any other reason for your failure other than the perversity of your birds. It seems almost impossible that you could have got hold of three really barren pairs, though you may possess inbred or too closely related stock, and if so, this may be the cause in part.

MOULT OF PARROT (J. Berkley).—Many are moulting at the present time, but the period is rather variable, especially in newly-imported birds, which often drop odd feathers at intervals, more or less frequent during their first 12 or 18 months in this country. See that in addition to the ordinary diet your bird gets grit (Parrot grit), cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood in its cage continuously. For the next two months put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and, on intermediate days lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk sops, taole scraps, or any kind of animal food.

WILL IT TALK? (W. W., Cardiff.—Some Galahs become really talented birds, but there are many others that only whistle a little and mimic sounds and cries. From what you state I should say there is a strong probability that your bird would, at any rate, talk a little. Keep it where it will not be scared by rushy movements, yet where it will share your life and hear plenty of talk, etc., going on around it. Also when it is in restful mood teach it by the constant repetition method—words and short phrases. There is no royal road; it's a case of patience and perseverance.

HEN BUDGERIGARS NOT RENEWING FEATHERS (May C.).—They may not have commenced the moult at the same time, and the hen may be merely a little behind her mate, or it may be a case of old age, or only a slight indisposition which is cheeking matters. Give them a seed mixture of canary and white millet in equal parts, and a tablespoonful of crushed oats twice a week. While obtainable free from frost, supply as much flowering and seeding grass as they care to eat. Keep grit and cuttlebone continually in the cage. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the water with chemical food. Treat so for a month, then report progress.

BARE POLLS (A. M. C.).—I do not think there is anything infectious the matter with your birds. At the same time I should examine the aviary furniture for parasites, and if you find any scald them and spray all the aviary woodwork with a quassia solution. Personally, I think it merely the result of wear and tear, with possibly a little bickering thrown in, which the moult will rectify. Put a little fluid magnesia in the drinking water twice a week, and lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food two or three times a week. Some pairs of Zebra Finches have bad habits, such as you describe, but before you condemn them be sure they are not being disturbed by insects, mice, or other birds. You should have a prospect of success with such as Bengaleso, Bib Finches, Java Sparrows and the like in your cages. Re the large box cage for Parrakeets, the paint should not do any harm unless it is very new. I have in the past kept Parrakeets in painted cages, and though they have cut them up considerably, have suffered no harm therefrom.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Miss Ormsby.—Budgerigar died as the result of advanced liver disease. This was no doubt responsible for the symptoms displayed during life.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Feeding a Thrush (J. Stones).—We fear that although you say your Thrush is doing well, it will not continue to thrive on the diet you are giving it. Crushed hemp seed and bread crumbs are a totally unsuitable food, and the bird is practically existing on the few worms and pieces of raw meat which you say you are giving it three times a week. Raw meat will sooner or later set up diarrhœa, and you will lose the bird unless you alter its diet. You should give it a good brand of insectile food, such as you will see advertised in our columns, with some Spratt's or other poultry meal added. To enough of this for one day you should add sufficient boiled potato or scraped carrot to make the whole crumbly moist, and you should give besides this the small worms you mention and a snail or two when you can get them. Our Nutshell on the Thrush or the one on the larger insectivorous birds (No. 26) will assist you in the proper management. Our Manager would send you either of these post free for 2½d., or you could get them at your local corn shop or bird dealer's for 2d. each.

Linnet or Redpoll (C. Parr).—See Mr. Norman's replies next week for an answer to your query. Also please see Rule 6 at the head of these columns.

Suitable Bird House (G. Wood).—It is, of course entirely a matter for your own option whether you use the place for breeding Canaries or for Hybrid breeding. The former is, of course, the more easy of the two. Please see Rule 6 at the head of these columns, and look among Mr. Norman's replies next week for an answer to your muling question. You did not send your address with your query.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your next breeding season a record in every way by purchasing now a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES BOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Boulton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Boulton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL.

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVIARIES and CAGES, on BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DISEASES & THEIR CURE, SEEDS, Etc., and devotes a separate chapter to each individual variety.

Get a copy now, it will help you during the breeding season.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

There's Money in this Book for YOU

Only 1/- Down Brings It to Your Home

YOU can put money into your purse and help to establish the pre-eminence of British Canary Breeding with the aid of this wonderful Guide Book.

Hundreds of German and Austrian peasants made comfortable incomes out of the well-known Roller species before the war. Why should not the British Breeder contest this monopoly?

that tells you everything there is to know about Canaries, Canary Keeping, Breeding and Exhibiting. It shows you how you can turn a most interesting home hobby into a source of revenue and profit. The best methods of dieting, training, and rearing are all explained here. Every lover of these beautiful birds should possess a copy, for there is more money in Canaries than many imagine. British-bred Canaries can occupy the same place of pride as British horses, dogs and cattle. Write for particulars of "Our Canaries" to-day. 20-page Booklet Free.

380 Pages of Helpful Advice.
32 Handsome Coloured Plates.
133 Illustrations.

Descriptive Illustrated Booklet FREE.

"A Most Wonderful Volume."

Bourne Cottage, Totwick.

I received "Our Canaries" quite safely, and am delighted with it. It is a most wonderful volume, and is worth double its value. No Canary breeder should be without it.

(Signed) W. DYE.

"Truly Worth the Money."

19, Goldsmith Avenue,
Manor Park, Essex.

I must take the opportunity of saying how pleased I am with "Our Canaries." It fulfils in every way all that you say of it, and is truly worth the money charged for it.

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting quartette, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell No. 20," 2½d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutshell No. 14," from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2½d. From agents (see list frequently published).

VERY pretty Amazon Parrot, perfect plumage, acclimatised, healthy, finger tame, talks, dances, whistles, mimic, splendid companion for invalid, large brass mounted cage, bargain, accept £3, worth £5; terms of payment can be arranged to suit purchaser; call and inspect for yourself: E. Hope, 45, Great Bridge, Staffs. (553)

AVADAVATS! Avadavats are very charming little birds, but they need care. The "Nutshell" booklet, "Avadavats," contains full information on the management of these birds. You cannot do better than have a copy by you, and we shall be pleased to forward same upon receipt of 2½d. Write, The Publisher, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown. Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutshell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once, 2½d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

Club Reports.

STANLEY (Victoria Club) F., F., &c.

Meeting Aug 20, Mr. J. Armitage, chair, and another grand turn up of members. We made up a schedule of 54 classes, so we are going to have plenty of classes to suit all members.—R. Hutchinson, Sec.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready).

Meeting, Aug. 9, Mr. J. S. Dixon presiding, and a good turn-out. Report of young bird show was given and adopted unanimously. Decided to have annual schedule drawn up at next meeting, Sept. 6. New members elected: A. Hirons, G. Scott, A. Tucker (Boldon); H. T. Russell, W. R. Smith (Sunderland); R. White (Wallsend). We have a membership now of 50, which is a good record for a society which was formed on Jan. 26, 1916. Our radius is 20 miles. Entrance, 1s.; sub., 2s. 6d.—J. W. Watson, Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting, Aug. 12, Mr. Swan presiding over a good attendance. Mr. Russell (Sunderland) was elected to membership. Decided to hold a Members' Show, but before fixing date and place, it was moved that a deputation (Messrs. Waters, Swan, and Sec.) attend the meeting of the Sunderland F.A., with a view to their holding their show in conjunction with us as last year, so that arrangements could be made to suit both societies. Since the meeting I understand that a deputation has been appointed by the Sunderland Fanciers for our next meeting. The Northern Crest Club will hold their Annual Club Show with our Members' Show.—J. Peacock, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN CREST CLUB.

Meeting, Shield's Cafe, Bigg Market, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mr. W. F. Swan presided over a large meeting. After a long discussion on our patronage it was decided not to give any patronage, but to hold a Members' Crest Show in conjunction with the Sunderland C.B.S., on Dec. 26, Mr. J. Clark, Sunderland, judge. There will be twelve classes for Crests and Crest Breds with a shilling entry fee; prizes on the sliding scale. There will be the usual cup competition with a gold medal with each cup, but there will be no silver medals this year, a half-crown special being given in their place for most points in each class. Birds to be staged by nine o'clock. The classes are: Crest, cock, hen.; Yell. Crest, Crest 1916, Yellow Crest 1916, Novice Crest; same in Crest Bred. There will be another meeting before the show, when I hope there will be a large turnout of members. A few members have not paid subs. for 1916; kindly do so, so as to swell our membership and make a good show when it comes round.—G. Dobson, Hon. Sec.

CITY AND COUNTY OF PERTH.

Meeting, Laidlow Hall, Leonard Street, Aug. 14; Vice-president, Mr. B. Crawford, chair. Club show to be held Oct. 21. Judge, Mr. W. Grewar, Lochgelly. Classes as last year. Decided to get Leith prize cards. Mr. J. Styles was appointed treasurer for the year, as our treasurer is going to Dundee. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to chair.

W. BROMWICH & HANDSWORTH.

Meeting, July 29, Ivy House, Handsworth. Messrs. Sheldon, Hicklin, and Hernshaw were elected members. Mr. Loach (Wolverhampton) was nominated as a vice-president, also as a member. Mr. Jeffries (Harbourne) was also nominated for membership. Agreed that young stock show be held in October, Mr. Baker (Perry Barr) to judge. After a heated discussion it was decided to abandon open show and to have an inter-club show in its place, inviting City of Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and South Birmingham to show. Mr. Roe (Perry Barr) to judge.—T. Cowley, Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.A.

A Social Evening and a Presentation.

On Aug. 19 the members of the Swansea C.B.A., held a social at Messrs. Palmer's, Oxford Street (Mr. Alf. Richards in the chair), and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The event was made the occasion of presenting to Mr. W. J. Jenkins a small token of appreciation of the services rendered to the society in officiating as judge at the Young Bird Show, a duty which he carried out in a most admirable manner and gratuitously. The presentation, which took the form of a pipe and case and pouch, was suitably made by Mr. J. W. Ford, the senior member of the society present (Mr. Phil. Jenkins, the senior member being unavoidably absent through illness). Mr Jenkins suitably responded and said that it afforded him the greatest pleasure to do what he could for the society and the fancy generally.

The evening was then given over to singing, the programme of which was ably attended to by Mr. S. Slocombe. Songs were rendered by Messrs. Bodycombe, Evans, Williams, and Jenkins; elocutionist, Mr. Thomas. At the close a hearty vote of thanks to all who had taken part in entertaining the members was moved by Mr. J. H. Ford, and seconded by Mr. J. E. Jeffries, to which all responded in a hearty manner.—J. H. Ford, Sec.

BRITISH ROLLER C.C.

An Important Decision.

Meeting, Aug. 15, Cock and Lion Hotel, Wigmore Street, London, Mr. F. A. Lester presiding. There was a good attendance and, more welcome still, a good number of new members to propose. So far 30 have been added to the roll this year. Judging from the reports of members present it would appear that the breeding season has been satisfactory on the whole. The proposed Roller Canary Association and the scheme of rules, etc., published in Cage Birds, Aug. 5, came under careful discussion, and it was proposed by Mr. Fisher, seconded by Mr. Hocking, and carried unanimously that: "Whereas the British Roller Canary Club fail to see where the rules proposed by the Leeds Club would benefit the Roller fancy any more than the concessions given by the B.R.C.C. as already published in Cage Birds, they therefore decide not to become a club under the proposed Board of Control, as the B.R.C.C. at the present time fulfil all the requirements of the Roller fancy, and have moreover by their efforts brought the fancy to its present prosperous condition."

It is hoped at next meeting in September that one or more members will be able to bring some birds for the purpose of mutual edification, and to this end if any member chooses to bring up even a faulty bird, it will be of service for demonstration.—Sec., J. W. Norris; reporter, H. W. Gutierrez.

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—
"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."

THE STOCK BOOK

Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

How Bird Societies Can Help their Members.

By the REV. C. B. JOLLIFFE (Cardiff).

On June 20 the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe put a question to the members of the Cardiff C.B.S.: "What Advantages can the Society offer its Members?" The lecturer proceeded to answer his own question, and in doing so pointed out methods which should appeal not only to the members of his own society, but to those of every other in the Kingdom. By the courtesy of the Rev. Mr. Jolliffe we are enabled to reproduce the lecture for the general benefit.

ANOTHER service the society can render its members is in the disposal of stock which is no commendation to the breeder. From time to time breeders, who have the courage and enterprise to experiment with their birds, have birds which are either small, browy, or out of proportion to type. Some are beautiful show specimens, but neither layers nor feeders; others are eaters of eggs and young. Some cocks cannot fertilise eggs, and some hens will not rear their offspring. Some beautiful birds which we thought were hens at the last turn out to be cocks. As hens they were ideal; as cocks they are useless to us.

What are we to do with such as these? Sell them! Aye, but, to be frank, that is the difficulty. Give them away! Yes, but you have not solved the problem for the expert breeder with a reputation to be maintained.

If you give them away to a friend, you can only give away singing cocks, and some day a breeder will see one of these, and, there being something about it which attracts his notice, he asks, "Where did you get this bird?" "Oh, So-and-so bred it," says your friend; and it may be the breeder goes away saying: "So that's the stuff he turns out, is it?" and the thermometer of your reputation sinks to zero.

On the other hand, if you sell to a dealer, say for 2s. 6d., a bird for which in the ordinary way you would have asked 20s., simply because you want it gone, and the half-crown means 7lbs. of canary seed in its place, to your amazement you find the dealer has been trading on your reputation.

You can see your birds in his window, "So-and-so's strain, 15s. 6d.; best of blood here!" Yes, and the best blood you have is bad blood, nigh to boiling point. The very thing you desired to avoid is being shouted from the house-tops.

To add insult to injury the buyer is sent round to you with a request for its pedigree, etc., etc. You parted with that bird for a mere 2s. 6d. because you never wished to hear of it again or to be identified with it in any way. Now, like the poor, it is with you always.

What are we to do with this kind of stock? From all I can gather, the practice with some breeders is to wring the birds' necks and throw them in the ashbin. When it comes to egg and young eaters, and to hens who desert their young, I am not greatly troubled in conscience at their fate; indeed they deserve it, and in the majority of cases this is what should be done with them. But in the case of a bird which has done nothing to deserve this treatment I confess that my reputation cannot sentence that bird to death. I cannot take life except for a purpose. Fortunately for me, I have never been in a position where I could not dispose of all my stock. Maybe I am not experimental enough, my motto being "let well alone," and if I am disposing of non-feeders I frankly say so, and deduct price accordingly; but the rest of the Fancy are not all in this happy condition.

My suggestion is that the Society gather all the members' surplus and unsaleable stock, any time after Christmas, and buy each bird at a price, and then offer them to the many advertisers who are willing to take surplus stock at from 24s. per dozen up to £1 per pair "for export"! They would go without fear that your good name would be written on a label and tied to each bird's leg.

I am not greatly concerned as to what the dealer may think about this plan. I do know one thing, however, viz., that the best advice I can offer to any purchaser of breeding stock is never to buy of a dealer unless that dealer is a specialist breeder and will sell you the home-grown article.

I sincerely hope no one will accuse me of suggesting that dealers are dishonourable people. Far from that; only as dealers they neither seek nor care about the history of the bird they are selling. To them face value is everything; to the genuine pedigree breeder face value, however desirable, is not everything by long chalks.

You will observe I suggest the Society should purchase each bird from the members, and thus all profit would go to the Society. This will obviate all trouble about this or that bird being worth more than another; also the question of commissions. In any case, it is a matter for the committee to decide.

If "Cage Birds" is Snowed Under.

I do not know if any of us have fully considered what would happen in these days if no such medium for advertising stock, or reporting shows, as the one and only paper devoted to our hobby, viz., Cage Birds, were to be withdrawn owing to the financial difficulties created by the war. It is no use grumbling at having to pay an extra penny. I can say, with the certain approval of every gentleman present this evening, that Cage Birds has been ever so much more attractive since the price has been increased.

What we have to face as fanciers is what would happen if there were no Cage Birds. Remember, if a well-established paper cannot pay its way, a new venture is not going to accomplish what an old friend had failed to achieve.

I have been painfully impressed by the many many small periodicals which have been snowed under since the war started. At the very outset of the war "Canary and Cage Bird Life" went at a stroke, and the increased cost of labour and materials is such that no management can run a paper at the old cost of production.

I am therefore imagining the pedigree breeder with 50 to 100 surplus birds for disposal, and no medium through which he can reach the birdy public. Remember each issue of Cage Birds reaches nearly 50,000 people who are immediately concerned with caged birds. A small advert. has always brought me from 25 to 40 replies, and I have always disposed of my surplus stock without having to advertise twice in the same season.

Last year, many weeks after I had advertised and sold out, nearly 40 applications reached me in answer to the advert. of two months previous. Not selling any other birds than I breed, I had regretfully to send a negative answer to them all. How am I to let the birdy people know that I have any birds for disposal if no such paper as "C.B." is in existence?

The shows are the only means that I know. We should have to treble the selling classes; but what an expense! One and sixpence for each entry, and carriage, and entrance fees. Instead of 5s. to 10s. for an advert. in "C.B." it would mean, carriage and entrance fees combined, nearly £5 for 50 birds, and if we passed on this £5 to the customer we might kill the goose which laid the golden egg.

Another means is that societies could co-operate with each other, and a list of breeders and the quantities they had for disposal could be printed in the catalogues, and our own members' list posted up in the show. In any case, it would be less efficient and less satisfactory than the present admirable medium at our disposal.

My advice to one and all is, keep "C.B." going; not for sentimental reasons, but because it pays the Fancy to support a paper which has its interests at heart. Whether we realise it or not, it will be an ill day if Cage Birds puts up its shutters. For the sake of the hobby, and for the sake of making a £5 Canary fetch more than 10s. 6d. as a songster, rally to the support of "C.B.," and speak your mind plainly to the Editor if you don't get what you want, so long as what you want is reasonable.

Eastleigh C.B.S. Open Show is fixed for Nov. 15 and 16; judge, Mr. H. Norman, writes Mr. J. Alderslade, Sec.

The judges appointed for the show of the Sheffield O.S., No. 3-4, are Messrs. J. Robson, W. A. Cowgill, J. C. Barnes, and J. Frostick

Will members of the Provincial Roller C.C. please note that the next meeting will be held on Sept. 2, a week later than usual, writes Mr. J. T. Smith, sec.

Mr. J. Challenger, sec. Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S., writes that Messrs. Emmerson and Winstone won 2nd in the Greenfinch class, not Morgan as in our report.

Pathhead (Kirkcaldy) C.B.S. has decided to hold its annual show, open to Fife, in the Co-operative Hall, on November 11, writes Mr. J. Thomson, sec. Judges have not yet been selected, but I will send you word later on.

Walton and Everton Secretary Called Up.

Kindly intimate, writes Mr. A. G. Hunt, that I have been reluctantly compelled to resign my position as secretary for the Walton, Everton and Dist. C.B.S., owing to being called up for service with the colours, and any communications respecting the society should, at present, be addressed to the Chairman, Mr. G. Holmes, 2, Kenmere Road. Smithdown Road, Liverpool.

Owing to the name of Mr. A. H. C. Legg, the hon. assistant sec. of the Porth and Rhondda Valleys C.B.S., not being mentioned in the schedule, credit was omitted to be given him in our report for the hard work he did in helping to make the show a success.

Four classes for cage birds are provided in the schedule of Ystradgynlais F. and F.S. show on Sept. 7, Yorks., Norwich, A.O.V. Canary, and British. The prize money is 10s., 6s., 3s., 2s., and the entry fee 2s., and there is a silver medal for the best in each class. Entries close Aug. 31 to D. Evans, Ynys Cottage, Brecon Road, Ystradgynlais. The judge is Mr. A. Cook, Ystalyfera.

We have received from the hon. treasurer, Mr. R. L. Crisp, the balance-sheet of the Southern Yorkshire C.C. for 1914-1916. It appears from the figures given that, although subscriptions for 1915 are not taken into account, yet the cash balance in hand has been increased from £5 4s. 2d. to £8 2s. 2½d. The assets in cups in hand or promised are valued at £29 8s., and there are no liabilities.

The August number of "Hamlyn's Menagerie Magazine" contains an interesting article: "Birds and Beasts in the War Zone" giving the conclusions of some French and Russian ornithologists as to the effect of the war on the routes taken by various migratory birds. It also contains the announcement of the death of the 120-year-old Cockatoo, "Cocky Bennett," which we published in our issue of July 29. It is reprinted, heading and all, word for word from Cage Birds, even to "sends us," etc.

OBITUARY.

It is with feelings of regret, writes Mr. R. Hutchinson, Sec., that I have to inform you of the great loss one of our members, Mr. J. Mason, has sustained in the loss of his mother. She was a keen bird fancier, and was a regular visitor to our shows. I am sure all fanciers in Stanley and district will join with me in extending their deepest sympathy to Mr. J. Mason and family in their loss, and in hoping that God will give them strength to bear up under their heavy burden.

MR. J. O. WILLIAMS, BANGOR.

It is with deepest regret, write Messrs. W. Nolan and J. Kershaw, that we record the death of Mr. J. O. Williams, Goetra, Bangor, at the age of 46 years. He was a sound fancier, and had been a keen all-round exhibitor for years. He had judged very frequently at North Wales shows, and his awards were always well received. As a reporter, too, he was second to none, and his absence will be keenly felt at our fixtures here. He had made a lot of friends by his genial qualities, and never an untoward word came from his lips, a great asset in exhibition circles. He leaves a widow and six children to mourn his loss. He was a deacon of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist. The funeral took place on Aug. 14 at Bangor Glanadda cemetery. All who knew him will join with us in our deepest sympathy with his relatives in their sad bereavement.

MR. JOHN HAIGH, BRADFORD.

It is with great regret, writes Mr. D. Sunderland, that I have to inform you of the demise of an old fancier, John Haigh, Bradford, who died on Aug. 15. Our late friend was known as a sterling, upright, honest competitor in all classes of Cinnamon and Norwich Canaries. He belonged to a circle of good fanciers, many of whom have gone before, and when in the vein of reminiscence, and he could relate with characteristic Yorkshire vim many occurrences of past days. John had been a patient and uncomplaining sufferer for seven years, and passed away peacefully in the presence of his wife and family. His remains were interred at North Bierley Cemetery, on August 18, and were followed to the grave by many well known fanciers, amongst whom were Messrs. Thornton, Mundell, Crabtree, Greaves, and Mrs. C. M. Sunderland.

An Illuminative Lecture.

This week we publish on page 491 the concluding portion of what we have no hesitation in describing as the most helpful lecture ever given to any society in the Kingdom. We refer to the address given on June 20 to the members of the Cardiff C.B.S. by the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe. Previous instalments appeared in our issues of July 22, August 5, and August 19, and the lecture should be studied in its entirety by the committee of every bird society, for there is not one among them all which would not be benefited by the adoption of the admirable suggestions so plainly put before the members of the Cardiff C.B.S. by their widely-esteemed member and pastor. It is not every society which has the advantage of numbering among its members many such ardent workers for the general good as the Rev. Mr. Jolliffe, but all can benefit by the advice which he has kindly allowed us to bring before a much greater audience than the one which listened to the spoken words.

OUR WEEKLY PRIZE.

JUDGING from the letters received since our announcement of last week that we should give a weekly prize for the best letter published, we have struck an idea which appeals to a great number of our readers.

The response has been generous and interesting beyond anticipation, so much so that we have not been able to find room for all the letters in hand. This does not affect the awarding of the weekly prize which goes to the best letter published, and those letters which do not appear this week will have their chance in a later issue.

While writing this acknowledgment we have no idea what letters will appear this week, but the winning letter will be indicated in a paragraph under the heading of the Correspondence pages. We hope our readers will continue to support the proposition, so that it may become a permanent feature of our paper. It is by the interchange of views that the hobby of bird-keeping is kept to the front, and the reader who in any particular week is giving of his knowledge and experience for the benefit of others may himself learn something from the letters published which may repay him for his trouble, even though he may not win the cash prize.

Further, the fact that he may not win the prize with any particular letter should not deter him from writing another. The prize will be given weekly so long as the idea is supported, and someone must take it; the field is a wide one and is open to everyone every week.

One thing we would mention, however, and that is that the letters must be original. In the first week one competitor has thought proper to send in a letter which is a copy, word for word, of one which appeared many weeks back. It is not to be expected that we can always remember, offhand, letters which have appeared in old issues, but if by accident a prize is awarded to a letter which is not original, the award will not hold good. It is not necessary to say anything further in this connection excepting to point out that a person endeavouring to win a prize by sending as original something which has already appeared, places himself in an unenviable position.

We gather from communications received that there are some readers of Cage Birds to whom the idea of winning a monetary prize does not appeal. Readers who are so fortunately placed as not to need the money may allot their prize to any charity they may select.

On behalf of our readers in general we record our thanks to those who have been so quick in responding to our suggestion, and we hope that our Correspondence page or pages may long be quite the most interesting part of Cage Birds. We shall endeavour to make it a keen fight between Articles and Correspondence, and it is for our readers themselves to see that they beat the Editorial side of the paper.

ENGLISH-MADE BIRD TRAPS.

Time was when, if we wanted a really efficient trap to catch a bird or two for our own keeping we had to use one that was alien-made. This is so no longer, for Mr. Rudd, of Norwich, is now supplying traps which, although they act on the principle of the foreign-made article, are better in every respect. Samples of three kinds of these up-to-date traps, all of British make, are to hand, and we have given a practical trial to two out of the three. The "ready-baited" net trap is intended for the catching of Finches of any kind, and in our own garden it has proved to fulfil its purpose. Even the wily House Sparrow has failed to notice that to alight on the perch of the platform which was furnished with a tempting bait of rape seed (glued on) was to release the encompassing net. The other kind which we have tried is on the model of the old German spring net trap, but considerably better in the finish. When this trap is set all that is visible to the birds is a berry or a mealworm, and the bird which essays to get away with the bait finds that the action of the spring is a bit too quick. This trap will take for certain any Softbill bird from a Garden Warbler to a Jackdaw which sees the bait. The third pattern is intended for taking the smaller Softbills, and consists of a square of board to which is attached a spring net. The arrangement for attaching the bait is very ingenious, and should delude any bird into the idea that nothing in the nature of a snare is anywhere near. The "ready-baited" traps are sold at 2s. 1d. and 2s. 8d., according to size; the round wire trap at 2s. 8d. and 3s. 3d., and the flat board trap at 2s. All are well made, and cheap at the prices.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long, practical experience. Terms moderate.

THOS. BENNETT, Judge of Cage Birds; life experience; terms moderate: 14, Cumberland-rd., Lidget Green, Bradford.

J. W. BRUCE, Coldstream. Judge of all varieties of cage birds; Border and British Bird specialist. Terms moderate.

W. A. COWGILL, 115, Washington Street, Girlington Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

GEO. GARDNER, 11, Haverstock Road, London, N.W. Judge of all kinds of Cage Birds.

C. HOBBS, 35, Queen's Road, Northampton, having retired from business, can judge Canaries and cage birds. 40 years breeder and exhibitor. Terms moderate.

J. HOLROYD, 27, Kingswood St., Gt. Horton, Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

J. R. HOUGHTON, 21, Hatfield Road, Gloucester; judge of Canaries and Cage Birds; specialist in Norwich; terms moderate.

C. A. HOUSE, Briardene, Idle, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and other Cage Birds.

J. W. METCALFE, Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool. Judge of Cage Birds, Specialist Yorks. and Norwich; terms moderate.

W. MUNDELL, 6, Carlisle Place, Manningham, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds.

H. NORMAN, The Eyrie, Salisbury Road, Carshalton, Surrey. All varieties of Cage Birds. Specialist Hybrids and British Birds.

J. PATTERSON, Chirnside, Judge of Cage Birds; all varieties. Wide, practical experience. Specialist Border Fancy Judge.

J. H. PAYNE, 17, Northgate Street, Gloucester, Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Cage Birds.

C. E. SILK, The Aviaries, Emsworth, Hants. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Life experience.

JAMES STANGER, 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, Co. Durham. A.V., Spl., Nor. and Cr.

HENRY TAMS, Orchard Place, Longton, Staffs. Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Birds. Twenty-five years' Breeder and Exhibitor.

S. TICKELL, 22, Henry Street, Bodmin. Judge of all varieties; specialist Norwich, Cinn. and Liz. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. VARDY, The Aviaries, Hucknall Huthwaite, Notts. Judge of all varieties; specialist in Norwich Plainheads. Life experience. Terms moderate.

J. WILCOCK, The Fountain Inn, Eccleshill, nr. Bradford. Judge of Cage Birds, all varieties

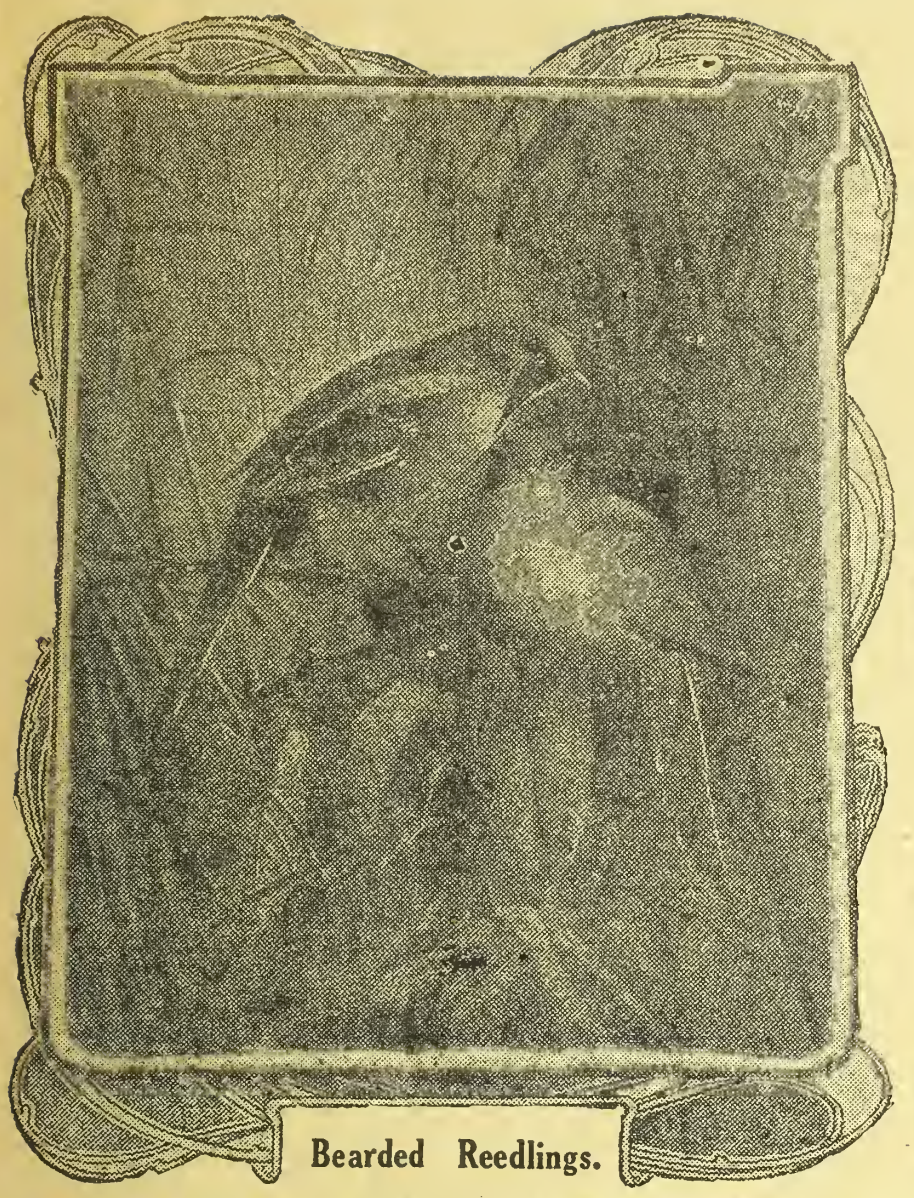
J. WALSH, Bird Specialist, Blackburn. Judge of Cage Birds all varieties. Specialist British, Foreign, Mules and Hybrids.

G. WILSON, 14, Frizington Rd., Frizington, Cumberland. Judge of Mules, Brit., For. Specialist, Brit., Mules. Life experience; terms moderate.

W. YOUNG, 25, Grosvenor Road, New Brighton. Judge of Cage Birds. Life experience. Terms moderate.

Larkhall C.B.A. wishes to inform all fanciers in the district, writes Mr. T. J. McGregor, sec., that the annual show date is altered from October to 25th Nov.

RESULT OF OUR SIX GUINEA COMPETITION.



TAKEN as a whole, the articles in the British bird section of this competition were far and away the best of those sent in, and the awarding of the prizes has been no easy matter. Practically every article sent in was worthy of a prize, and it is only after long consideration that we have decided to award the 1st prize to Mr. F. Bent, Glasshouse St., Nottingham, for his intensely interesting article entitled "The Songster of the Night," published in our issue of Aug. 12. The second prize of half a guinea goes to Mr. T. G. Addison, 27, Peel St., Thornaby-on-Tees, for "The Linnet in Nature and Captivity" in the same issue, after a close fight with 'Our Large Softbills," by Mr. C. G. Taylor, in the issue of Aug. 5.

The first prize of a guinea in the Canary Section is awarded to Mr. J. Tomlinson, 30, Thistleberry Avenue, Neweastle, Staffs., for "The Principles of Canary Breeding," Aug. 12 and Aug. 19, and the second prize goes to Mr. W. Connelly, 123, Henderson St., Kinning Park, Glasgow, for "Colour Feeding Canaries," Aug. 5.

In the Hybrid Section Mr. J. A. Hardie, 129, Lintburn St., Galashiels, wins the guinea for "The Principles of Hybrid Breeding," Aug. 12, and the second prize is awarded to Mr. J. G. Westgate, of 23, Westgate, Hale, Cheshire, for "How Novices may score," Aug. 12.

Miss Dyddgu Hamilton, 121, Harley St., W., wins the guinea in the Foreign Section for the article, "Four Favourite Foreigners," in our issue of Aug. 12, and Mr. T. Goodwin, 3, Cobourg Villas, Colourg St., Old Kent Road, gets the half-guinea for "My Black-checked Lovebirds," July 29.

The half-guinea prize for the best answer to the question "What is your favourite Softbill?" is awarded to Mr. A. V. Williams, 6, Greenhough Row, Beacon St., Lichfield, Staffs., for his letter on the Bearded Tit, published on page 480 of last week's issue.

Bearded Reedlings.

In this picture, by Mr. J. G. Keulemans, is shown pair of these beautiful birds as they appear in their haunts among the reeds. The species, which was at one time fairly frequent in the fens of Norfolk, is gradually becoming extinct, owing to the drainage of the district. An article by the artist is given below.

THE BEARDED TIT IN NATURE AND IN CAPTIVITY.

By J. G. KEULEMANS.

YOUR readers may be glad to have some particulars from my pen to accompany the picture of the Bearded Tit, reproduced from a painting of mine. This pretty bird, now almost extinct in this country, was included by Linnæus in his genus Parus, chiefly on account of the shape of its beak and brush-like nostrils.

From an anatomical point of view, however, it can hardly be considered to be related to the true Tits, whilst its habits are totally different from the latter. The Bearded Tit is a bird by itself, having no allies in any part of the world. There are not even any local varieties, although some authors maintain that the examples obtained from Asia are paler in colour than those obtained in England. From personal experience I would conclude that the Asiatic specimens, to which Bonaparte gave the name of C. Sibericus, are simply birds in immature plumage.

What appears to me to be strikingly remarkable is that a bird so shy of the water—that is to say, extensive masses of water, like the sea—should ever have found its way into the British Islands. It is also remarkable that a bird, which passes the best part of the year near the water, should invariably travel along the shores of a lake or a river, and never attempt to cross a lake through space, even though the distance be no more than a quarter of a mile across.

Is it of Alien Origin?

Perhaps the Bearded Tit was, like some other birds, introduced into this country. I am positively certain that the majority of Bearded Tits that have been noticed of late in this country were originally obtained from Holland. A nest with one egg was sent to the British Museum of Natural History some years ago, obtained from a collector near Scoulton-mere, near Norwich. However, no date of the find could be relied upon, and, if memory serves me aright, I had seen that very nest in a glass case in the lodge of the keeper of Scoulton-mere.

Practically, the Bearded Tit is no longer a British bird, for the few examples that may be noticed in this country (Tring, in Hertfordshire) were Dutch specimens introduced by the Hon. Walter Rothschild into the Tring Park Estate. But even at this present time this pretty little bird is only occasionally heard or seen in that locality.

Considering that they do not immigrate from the Continent, and that the few that remain may gradually fall into the claws of Sparrowhawks or bird-catchers, it seems almost certain that within a few years hence the bird will have disappeared entirely from our shores.

Where they are in Flocks.

The Bearded Tit is only partially a migratory bird. Seebohm, in his "British Birds," states that it is a summer visitor in Holland. This, however, is by no means correct, for, although flocks will cross to Belgium in October, many remain during the winter, even during severe winters. I have seen and caught whole flocks in December, when the lakes were frozen and the country covered with snow.

During their autumnal wanderings flocks of some twenty to thirty birds may be seen flying from one reed-bed to another, often settling on the higher branches of adjacent trees or on the upper twigs of the bramble bushes, feeding on the seeds of what berries may have remained.

Early in April they separate into pairs and by the end of that month the nest is built, and the first brood of eggs are laid. There is a second brood late in June or early in July.

The nest is made of grass, remnants of broken reeds, lined with reed flowers and often a few feathers, mostly of duck or moorhen, which the birds pick up from the shore or find floating on the water. Unlike most reed dwellers, it rarely builds in the reeds, but prefers the sides of the lakes or broads where nettles or high grass are abundant. It is always carefully hidden under some overhanging twigs or leaves.

On only one occasion did I find a nest in a reed bed. It was built on the top of a submerged pollard willow, and placed on the only projecting portion of the "crown," and attached to some of the thinner willow twigs that rose above the water.

The eggs are usually four or five in number. They are of a glossy pale creamy white, with dark brown small spots all over, and a few blueish-purple curved lines at the broader end.

The young birds are fed by both parents with small insects, gnats, spiders, mayflies, ants' eggs and soft larvæ found in the reeds. During the summer months the parent birds likewise feed on insects, but in winter they will take small seeds from the sorrel, poppy, and also the seeds contained in the alder cones.

Very Exclusive.

Bearded Tits do not associate with other feather denizens of their neighbourhood except the Sparrow, whose chirping call-note they never fail to answer. Yet they do not keep company with the latter for any amount of time. It seems these two species of birds are simply on saluting terms and no more.

The Bearded Tit has many enemies to fear. During their autumn travels many fall a prey to the Hobby or the Sparrow Hawk, whilst in summer many of their nests are emptied by Weasels, Magpies, or Jays, which steal their eggs. Herons, even the small Bittern, often make a meal out of the unfledged young ones.

As cage birds they are very attractive, but can only survive captivity for a short time. When kept separately they will mope and die within a few days, unless other cages containing their mates are placed close together. Hence, they are to be kept in pairs—death of the one means death to the other within a week.

The male bird seems very fond of his "other half," and looks carefully after her toilet, especially of the feathers of the back of her head. When going to sleep, or squatting to rest, the male takes its partner under its wing like a fowl protects her chicken.

Most of the caged Bearded Tits that are offered for sale in London are derived from Holland, viz., the smaller islands north of the Zuider Zee, whence they are shipped to the town of Helder. Formerly they were very common near the lakes between Rotterdam and Gouda. The Cormorant island of ornithological repute, situated midway between these localities, harboured hundreds of pairs during the summer months.

At the present time these birds have become far less numerous in these or any other parts of Holland, their actual habitat being the river Danube, and its adjacent marshes; also the delta of the Volga in Southern Russia.

Bearded Tits have no song—only a short, but loud call note sounding like a "pang-pang" or "pong-pong." They have, however, an alarm note which is a long continued shrill "Ee-are." This they rarely utter when caged except when a cat comes near, or one of the pair manages to escape.

How to treat them in Captivity.

They will breed in confinement when sufficient room is provided for them to use their wings freely, and when plenty of seeds and water are placed in the aviary. I have had many eggs laid by captive females, but they invariably proved to be barren; probably because I kept the pair in too small a cage.

There is no necessity to have a real paired couple to secure connubial happiness. A male bird and a female though strangers are welcome to each other. In case one dies the dead bird should be immediately replaced by another of the same sex, or the survivor will fret itself to death.

I kept one pair for over two years, which is a very long time for such a delicate kind of bird. The hen bird laid seven eggs in as many days, and then gradually began to assume the plumage of the male, partly by moult and partly by change of colour afterwards.

The best time to secure good specimens for the cage is August or early September. The young birds in their pale fawn plumage, with the dark spot on the back, are more hardy and more likely to survive the privation of freedom.

Food should be very carefully prepared, and the feeding trough kept very clean, as the Bearded Tit happens to be particularly sensitive to cleanliness. They will thrive on a mixture of maw (poppy) seeds, biscuit crumbs and finely-chopped hard-boiled egg, together with a few mealworms or a dozen of fresh ants' eggs every day.

Some Further Notes on the Bearded Tit.

By PHILORNIS.

CHARMING as a species on account of its delicately tinted plumage and graceful form, and attractive as a cage bird from its sprightliness and hardihood, and its pleasant tinkling note, it is no wonder that this little bird is regarded with high favour by those bird-keepers who have watched and studied it in captivity.

The adult cock Bearded Tit is about six inches in total length, of which the tail is three inches or thereabouts. The beak (which is slightly curved) and the eyes are yellow; the top of the head delicate bluish-grey; there is a black patch between the beak and the eyes, from which, on each side of the head, a tuft of black feathers hangs downwards, forming a pointed, drooping moustache three-quarters of an inch in length, which is capable of being raised or depressed by the bird at will.

The ear-coverts and neck are pearl-grey; the nape of the neck and the whole of the back are bright cinnamon; the wings variegated with white, black and red; the breast dull white tinged with yellow and pink; the tail cinnamon, variegated with white and black, with a black patch beneath.

The tail is shaped like that of the Magpie or Pheasant, the central feathers longest and the outer ones decreasing in length on each side, and to this feature the bird owes its name of Reed-pheasant. The legs are somewhat long and black in colour.

The adult female has the top of the head and the moustache a dull rust colour, and is without the black patch below the tail. The general plumage is paler than in the cock bird.

Newly-fledged birds have the back, wings and tail patched with black, but in other respects resemble the hen.

Its Natural Habitat.

In its wild state the Bearded Tit delights in marshy localities abounding in pools of stagnant water and vast reed beds, and has, owing to the drainage and cultivation of such places, become a rather scarce bird in England.

From the inaccessible nature of its haunts, it may, however, in some districts be more numerous than is generally believed; but it is only about the reedy margins of the Broads in Norfolk that it is now positively known to breed in this country.

It was formerly numerous, and interesting observations were made of its habits in the neighbourhood of Whittlesea Mere in Huntingdonshire and also in Cambridgeshire, but its extermination in that part of the country was brought about fully sixty years ago.

It also abounded at one time in East Suffolk, Essex, Kent and Surrey and was plentiful about the mouth of the Medway and along the Thames. At Whittlesea Mere, we are told, these birds used to be caught, while feeding, with a limed twig attached to the end of a fishing rod.

The Days of Long Ago.

One old writer tells us how he sallied forth on a cold December morning to make observations of this species among the reeds below Barking Creek on the Thames, while the reed-cutters were carrying on their operations; and how he saw "eight or ten of the beautiful creatures on the wing, just topping the reeds"; and then how, after a while, he shot a cock bird and held it in his hand when scarcely dead, thinking what a "masterpiece of colour and neatness" it was.

When thus seen in their reedy haunts, these little birds are constantly on the move, running up and down the tall stems and feeding on the seeds of the reeds, capturing the insects on their leaves, or searching about their bases for the small mollusks (or water snails) and other tiny creatures which largely form their food.

The crop of this species has more than once been found to contain the tiny shells of these mollusks only, sometimes in a whole, sometimes in a fragmentary state, and once to the number of twenty, the cavity of the crop being about the size of the interior of a hazel-nut.

The digestion of these minute snails and their shells was found to be aided by the presence in the crop of sharp fragments of quartz and other grit. There can be no doubt, however, that these birds are also largely seed eaters, much more so, probably, than the true Tits, and that the seeds of the reed (Arundo phragmites) form their chief food in the winter.

The Bearded Tit has a quaint musical note, which has been described as resembling the monosyllable "ping" pronounced first slowly and singly, and then two or three times more hurriedly, and uttered in a clear, ringing tone.

Correspondence.

Every week a Prize of Ten Shillings is given for what, in the opinion of the Editor of "Cage Birds," is the best letter published under this heading. The letter may be on any subject; it may be a comment, for or against, on anything which is published in our pages, an opinion on the policy of our paper, or may have no reference whatever to anything which has already appeared. So long as it is on a "birdy" subject it will be eligible to compete for the prize. The Prize this week is awarded to Mr. J. BASTOCK, Springfield Rd., Moseley, for his very practical letter on page 495.

Is There Anything in This Old Story?

Sir,—I have from time to time noticed enquiries from correspondents in Cage Birds for information how to sex birds, and as I have gained much information on different subjects through the perusal of your paper, in acknowledgment I will try to explain my method of distinguishing the sexes. Thread a needle singly with about 12 inches of silk; then place a 2s. or 2s. 6d. coin on the table. Now take one end of the thread between fingers and thumb, bringing the needle as near as possible to the coin, and take the bird in the other hand. After a few seconds the needle will move; if it revolves around the coin the bird is a cock; if a hen, the needle moves pendulum fashion across the coin. I may say that I have tested this method and have never known it to fail. Even young birds in the nest can be sexed in this way. It will act in exactly the same manner by taking hold of a lady or gentleman's hand. Perhaps some readers will test it for themselves and let me know the result of the test.

Llandudno. J. R. Williams.

How Officialdom Works.

Sir,—Thanks very much for publishing the [Twittering "Fish for one; fowl for the other," in "C.B." July 29. As I was certified by my doctor to be suffering from tuberculosis in a particular part of the body I wrote to the recruiting officer asking him to grant me permission to appear before the Medical Board before breaking up my business (I had only been before one military doctor, and he never saw my complaint), but he would not allow me to do so. I went to see him personally, and still he refused, so I had some large bills printed and put in my shop window: "Compulsory sale; all birds and cages to be sold cheap, as the proprietor is called to the colours and will soon be a left-tenant." Well, it caused a little fun, and I sold more than half my stock.

The Medical Officer of Health for Eastbourne heard of my case, so he sent for me, examined me, and found me suffering from the above complaint, and reported my case to London. On Aug. 17 I received a blue card of total exemption, but in the meantime I have lost my situation at Devonshire Park, Eastbourne (I am a musician), as my place has been filled, and close on £100 in my business. Do you consider this fair treatment?

Breeding Bullfinches in Cages.

Another Try for the Cock Bullfinch-Hen Canary Cross Proposed.

Sir,—You may remember that in May last I wrote to ask if you thought the eggs from a pair of Bullfinches in a cage, in a summer-house in my garden, would be fertile; and as it may interest some of your numerous readers I now send you the result of my trying this season to get young Bullfinches.

On May 8 the hen had laid five eggs (in an old Blackbird's nest, in a nestpan on the bottom of the cage), which I put under Canaries, and two eggs were hatched, but the Canary let them die after three days. On May 28 six more eggs, three hatched, but the Canary refused to feed them. On June 12, four eggs, two hatched, young ones died, and on July 21, four eggs—the hen Canary broke them all. I then parted the birds.

I bought the Bullfinches last December, and they were flying all the winter in a three-compartment breeding cage with a hen Canary and cock Goldfinch. Although the hen was so tame that she laid while I stood looking on, she only sat one whole day on the eggs. The cock, too, would sit still and let me catch him.

I always understood that Bullfinches were so shy that you never could see them couple, but when I took this cock away for a few hours, and then put him back, he would fly straight from my hand and couple with the hen like a Canary, without any bowing and scraping about

If the birds live through the moult I intend next season to run the hen with a Siberian cock Goldfinch, and keep the cock with a hen Canary and see if I can get fertile eggs. What do readers say as to this? I may add that, after trying for five years I have succeeded in getting one Hybrid (now seven weeks old) from a Siberian cock Goldfinch and a British hen Bullfinch.

A RINGED GULL SHOT.

Sir,—On Aug. 16, while spending my holidays at Pilling, near Garstang, I saw a farmer shoot two Gulls, which I think are called the Grey-backed Gull. When picked up one had a ring on its leg, which I enclose, thinking the person that rung the bird would like to know where it was caught. The ring is marked 3374-7.

H. Heap.

[The bird was ringed under Messrs. Witherby's marking scheme. We have sent the ring to Messrs. Witherby, and will print their reply when received.—Ed. Cage Birds.]

The Cruelty of Closed Rings.

Should They Be Abolished?

Sir,—I heartily endorse all Mr. H. G. Hill says in his article on closed rings, having suffered in precisely the same way both with young and old birds. One specially favourite hen has only one foot through a too-tight ring being used.

Heathfield. Henry Neve.

Sir,—After reading Mr. Hill's letter on the cruelty of closed rings for Canaries, published in your issue of August 19, I think perhaps my own experience of a larger ring might be of some use to him and other fanciers. Three years ago I bought an exquisite tiny Roller cock, rung with too large and heavy a ring. It slipped up and down his leg, worrying him dreadfully, so much so that he could not sustain his trills, and broke off constantly to peck at the ring. After about a week I noticed his leg was getting inflamed and swollen from the foot to the joint, and I therefore decided at all risks to remove the ring, which I accomplished successfully by means of a pair of short-blade nail scissors and the aid of someone else to hold the leg. In a very short time the bird's leg returned to the natural size, and at the present moment he is in the most perfect condition and song. I may add that I disapprove in toto of this system of rings, but if they must be used, at least let them be of the open kind, and of soft metal, easy to remove in case of necessity.

(Mrs.) W. Freke Evans.

Sir,—I have read Mr. Hill's letter about closed rings, and I am sure everyone will sympathise with him in having to cause his pet to suffer. It is, of course, happily, an uncommon calamity; nevertheless, it is a warning to us all to be watchful, and I have had a good look at my two old birds, which, however, are German Club rung, and there is plenty of play on the leg, I see.

I cannot agree with him that the ciphers on the German rings are plainer than ours. So far as the foreign rings are concerned, on birds I have imported in the past, and these are not a few, I have found several execrable, and the figures in some cases were jumbled together as if stamped with some loose worn-out type.

As regards his suggestion that a little larger ring would have many advantages, and his reasons set forth under three headings, I welcome it, and entirely agree with him. I have heard of breeders who, delaying ringing and finding it difficult, have passed an instrument through the ring to enlarge it, and in one instance I have done the same thing. I lost, in 1913, my most valuable brood, six birds in one nest, through too early ringing; the whole lot lay with their claws mangled on the cage floor the afternoon following the day they were rung.

As Mr. Hill points out, a bird should not be rung until the whole brood are casting their excreta over the side of the nest, and for that reason the ring should be just a wee bit larger. I find that if your birds are given crushed hemp early you will have difficulty sometimes even on the fifth day. I have found this year that without hemp you can ring them easily on the sixth and seventh day, but why should feeding methods be subject to ringing exactions?

Whether there be any disadvantages I leave others to point out; I know of none. The play of the ring would be greater, therefore the impact upon the foot as the bird settles after flight would be sharper; the ring must therefore be sufficiently blunt to counteract the effects of the fall on the claw so as not to cut it. Henry W. Gutierrez.

Help Wanted for Bristol Show.

Sir,—Will any Specialist Club, or individual fancier guarantee any classes, and thus help to enable a show to be held as usual at Bristol this year? If we are to hold one, we must make an early decision, and this may depend a good deal upon the response to this invitation. I shall, therefore be very glad to hear by Wednesday next, or earlier if possible, from anyone interested and ready to help.

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

Sir,—I get somewhat "mixed up" when reading "Sub Rosa's" letters. He starts by warning breeders against inbreeding, then he tells us he has had the inbreeding fever badly, and that it did not work for him, chiefly, as I pointed out, because he did not carry it far enough; he was disappointed because his winners did not produce winners at the first attempt.

Now, to that I said that had he paired the daughters back to the sire, who was a winner, that winner would have stamped his likeness upon his progeny, and if it had been done to the third generation the proportion of good birds would have been greater than he anticipated; but, of course, that was "some" inbreeding, and he could not see his way to such. Of course, I cannot vouch for it that he would have bred winners in that way, but I do think that he would have had a better chance than by mating his birds to others of a different strain.

The letter which "Sub Rosa" quotes this week somewhat knocks the bottom out of his previous articles; the writer is one who has done inbreeding to some extent, and still practices it with his show birds. It is men like these, who have done it in the past, and still do it occasionally, who can help us who are striving to find a more satisfactory way than merely pairing on sight value. I think that "Sub Rosa's" correspondent may be doing it more than he thinks at the present time. I know that after 12 years' breeding I have very few birds in my room that are not now related in a distant manner, and that in spite of the fact that until these last two or three seasons my chief aim has been to keep all my pairs unrelated.

My first venture on inbreeding was in 1914, when I paired the clear yellow cock, 3rd at last Palace Show, to his cousin. They produced me several good birds, including the clear yellow that won the N.Y.C.C. Cup. Now I find, on looking up the pedigrees of most of my pairs, there is the original blood of the uneven buff bred by Mr. F. Armstrong, and brother to his famous uneven buff, so that next season I should have the greatest difficulty imaginable to pair up birds that were not related in some remote degree.

In this way the gentleman who wrote to "Sub Rosa" may have the same difficulty, and may be unconsciously practising inbreeding more than he thinks. I had got Mr. House's book on this subject previous to the letter from "Invicta" in last week's issue, and, though I have not yet digested all the matter that it contains, I feel sure that it supports most of what I have written in the last few weeks, and the information Dr. Gordon Stewart has privately sent me has impressed me greatly as to the value of breeding with birds that are related, if suitable to each other and to the end aimed at, which with most of us is the production of a greater number of exhibition specimens from our present stock.

To say that the best exhibition Norwich has been produced from two unrelated birds does not prove that that is the only way to breed the best. Sight value in pairing is not to be despised, but the combination of the two methods is, in my opinion, the preferable way, and if this discussion makes breeders think more, and helps them to breed better, it will not have been in vain. In future I am going to pair what in my opinion is the best mating, and if related so much the better.

In one part of Mr. House's book the result of one breeder's experience is worth repeating. In breeding unrelated show birds he found the proportion of show to stock birds was as 1 to 6. The first season he inbred it was as 1 to 4, and the next it was as 1 to 2. Now, if we could get one exhibition specimen out of three, and keep all the other requisites such as health and stamina in our stock, it would be a very nice thing and one worth striving for. T. C. Crawhall.

Sir,—As a reader of Cage Birds for all the years it has been in print, I have not yet read anything so interesting as the discussion on inbreeding opened up by "Bee Jay," now known as J. W. Gordon Stewart, who, I see, by-the-bye, is a Scottie, as I am myself. Now, I have studied all the different opinions of your readers, and all are to me very interesting, though there are a few things that we all differ in.

A year ago I had come to the conclusion that inbreeding was the quickest way to success, so I made up my mind to try my hand, or in other words my birds, this last breeding season, and I put up a very good buff Border cock, clear, to a heavily-marked hen, his daughter, that matched him in every way. She also was a buff, and both were in good sound health, out of healthy stock, and related to local winners. My object was to reproduce the same as this pair, and my hopes were realised at the first go off, as we say here. In the first nest were four young, one the exact picture of her mother, both in colour and shape, the only difference being that the young hen had a light patch on the head that the mother had not, one young buff cock the model of the sire and grandsire in every way, another clear buff cock, an improvement on both, one that I had been trying to breed for a long time, years in fact, a "wee gem" sure enough, and still another, this time a buff variegated cock, not just so good as the sire but a useful stock bird all the same. So much for the first round.

Round two: five young, three more or less lightly marked, two cocks and one hen, one ticked hen, and one clear hen, the two variegated cocks and the variegated hen a trio of beauties, the ticked hen a fair stock hen, the clear hen a waster.

I had more pairs of Borders breeding, unrelated, one pair made up of a variegated buff cock to a clear yellow hen, from which I bred seven young, but I am only keeping one. I shall allow your readers to draw their own conclusions here.

But now I come to a point that is not so pleasant, and of course will give those that are opposed to inbreeding something to go on with. I have lost the two clear buff cocks bred from the father and daughter, and the variegated hen, easily the best of the hens, bred from same, has gone soft. I have been treating her for a few weeks, but whenever I take her off bread and milk she goes lumpy. There will be no inbreeding from this hen whether she comes round or not. From the other hens I reared eight birds from unrelated pairs which are all in the pink of health. If the clear cocks had lived I should have kept seven out of the nine for my next breeding season from the pairing of father and daughter, but from the unrelated pairs I am only keeping two out of eight, which speaks for itself.

My conclusions, therefore, are that inbreeding is the right move to produce exhibition specimens; but while you are gaining in that line you are likely to meet with much disappointment, as it seems, as far as my experiment goes, that it tends to produce more weaklings. All the same, I find, even though I have lost my best young ones, that I have gained by the experiment, both in producing better specimens and in having some good sport by so doing.

I have written these lines in the hope that more of your readers will give us their experiences, though it is out of my line writing to the press, being only an ironmoulder by trade. I mention this to encourage others that do not write often to come in with a note, as I know, sir, you will make all right any mistakes that may be made, and I am sure there is much to be gained by an exchange of views.

One thing more, and then I am done. "Sub Rosa" says at the end of his last letter, "nor do I think that any analogy can be drawn between cows and horses; cows are not so frail things as Canaries." I also think we ought to keep that in view. I should like to ask Mr. Gordon Stewart if he can make more clear what he wrote in the part of his letter as to agreeing with "Invicta." Does he mean that Canaries, being more frail and smaller animals, we can closer inbreed? Allow me to thank you again, Sir, for all the good times I have had in reading Cage Birds, and I wish it still further success.

T. R. Wallace.

[In a postscript our correspondent says:—"Kindly put right anything that you think is not quite clear in my letter, as I am not an expert at this game, but I am going to try and make myself one if you do not have to take a rest after the work you will have in putting this one right. Again I thank you for your interest in the Fancy in general." To this we can only say that it is as much a pleasure to hear from a reader without the literary ability to concoct a polished letter as to receive the most faultlessly composed communication, and we hope, as we have said many times before, that readers who may be conscious of their inability to express themselves in beautifully-rounded periods will not allow this consciousness to deter them from letting their fellow bird-keepers have the benefit of their ideas and practical experience. —Ed. Three-ply Wood in Cage Making

Sir,—Your correspondent, Mr. Jock Hill, in Cage Birds of August 19, wishes to know how I fix the top and bottom boards and the back together by nailing, the material being three-ply (3/16-inch thick) wood. If he uses care, and the right kind of nails, he will not find this a very difficult job. Most three-ply wood will be found to contain the two outer or face boards of fairly hard stuff, while the centre board is of a softer and more spongy nature; therefore, if the nail is started right, it will be pretty sure to follow the soft centre of the board. Of course, a proper kind of nail is required; I use ¾-inch No. 20 gauge ordinary wire nails, and, contrary to "Jock's" apprehension, these do hold, and hold well, in the three-ply wood. If "J.H." should be taking a walk in this neighbourhood, I should be very pleased to show him quite a large number of cages made according to the description given in my article of Aug. 5, and I would challenge him to find a sounder, tighter, or lighter lot of cages of similar size.

Heathfield. H. Neve.

Sir,—In reply to "A Cage-Making Query" I must say Jock Hill is wrong when he states that nails will not hold in three ply. I make all classes of cages, from show cages to six-compartment breeders, and some of my cages are made entirely of three ply; top, bottom, back, and sides, and I do not find the least trouble in joining the ends. If Jock Hill gets suitable nails and drives them straight down into the centre board of three-ply he will find the hardest job is in pulling them apart again, especially in the joint where the nails are driven across the grain of the wood. I think Mr. Henry Neve's article both interesting and instructive.

"The Limit."

Sir,—"Open confession is good for the soul." In looking over Twitterings of your issue of the 12th inst., I could scarcely believe my eyes. I thought I must be dreaming, but no, there it was in cold print. "I only take Cage Birds when I am expecting to see a reply to my queries." Great Scot! What candour! If this isn't studying economy up to the hilt!

To think at the present time, with such heavy cost of labour and material what it means to keep a fancy journal going now that we have a very limited show season; also limited advertising, the very backbone of any journal, and last, though not least, so many of the readers of Cage Birds joining the colours—all honour to them.

In spite of the above confession, which I am sure is an isolated one, I think the best thanks of all readers of Cage Birds are due to you, sir, for your very generous catering each week to keep the fancy above water, and to the many contributors of such interesting and instructive articles of all sections of our fascinating hobby.

Fanciers of to-day have much to be thankful for. We had no paper devoted entirely to our "small pets" thirty years ago. Vive Cage Birds.

Importing Canaries from the "Old Country" to the Southern Hemisphere.

What is the Best Time?

Sir,—My object in writing this letter is to get the opinion of fanciers in the Southern Hemisphere as to the best time of the year to import Canaries from England to Australia or New Zealand. I am a resident of Auckland, New Zealand, and have imported birds, always to arrive out here about January, as our moulting season commences in February and the birds go into the moult on arrival and come into line with ours.

Of course, this means that the birds moult twice in the twelve months. From four hens, imported in different years, I have never got one chick, and I think the double moult so disorganises their system that they never are in condition again. These hens all died within eighteen months of landing. The cock birds, however, came into breeding about the following August, and from them I had good results.

Cage Birds, I know, travels far, and if a Sydney or Melbourne fancier could advise me by experience of a better time of the year to import, I should be most grateful. I am pleased to say that, submarines notwithstanding, I have not missed getting Cage Birds weekly, right through the war.

A "Big Push" at Liverpool.

Liverpool Show to be Held as Usual.

Sir,—At a well-attended meeting, viz., 100 per cent. (twelve members) of the Liverpool open show committee met on Aug. 17 to decide whether to carry on the show. Whether there might be a loss on the same was not taken into consideration, as we can stand this and then run another. The main question was whether it was wise to run a show, seeing that Liverpool is for the time a great military centre for munitions, embarking of troops, and a city of hospitals. The members who were in the army, viz., Messrs. G. Green, Geoff Benson, and J. W. Metcalfe, opposed the idea of running the show, as they might be required elsewhere. The question was well thrashed out, and on putting it to the vote the Army received the "knock-out," and the show will be run whatever comes. Sergt. Green promised plenty of reinforcements if the time-expired men got overpowered. We know we shall get plenty of support from the old fanciers, while the young fancier in France will be looking for his Cage Birds dated Oct. 28, to see the great result.

The Delightful Hobby of Canary Breeding and Some "Don'ts."

Sir,—The man who has no hobby is a miserable being, and does not know half the pleasures of this life. One of the most beautiful and interesting hobbies that any man may have is the study of birds, especially that of Canaries, which has as it were three seasons. First comes the breeding season, next the moulting season, and thirdly the showing season. Each of these provides food for the mind, and keeps expectation up to fever heat throughout the year.

This is not all, for, if the birds are properly attended to, Canary breeding is a hobby which pays well, and is therefore especially adapted for the working man. This is not only because it will in itself produce a profit, but a man may indulge in the hobby of bird keeping, that is to say of Canary keeping, in conditions where it would be impossible to keep other live stock. Although there are many thousands who keep these beautiful pets I am sure there would be thousands more if they knew the pleasure which is to be derived from their keeping.

Many times I have heard the remark made by visitors at our exhibitions that they would like to take up the hobby of cage bird keeping if it were not for the trouble concerned, and the necessity of thoroughly understanding the birds. As an old hand in the hobby of cage bird keeping I am prepared to say that is entirely a mistaken idea. Birds are very little trouble if attended to regularly, and as to understanding the business a novice can quickly learn all that is required by reading and studying the articles appearing from week to week in Cage Birds.

It is much easier to get to the front nowadays than it was 30 years ago. True, competition is very much keener, but experienced fanciers now are more willing to help young beginners than in times gone by, so that now it is within the reach of anyone, no matter how humble his station in life, to take up the breeding and exhibiting of Canaries, and this hobby can be depended upon not only to give a great amount of pleasure and interest, but, under reasonable treatment of the birds, to realise a good profit at the end of each season.

I should like to summarise my remarks by expressing a few "Don'ts":—Don't be persuaded to buy old birds. Don't give up if you fail at first, try again. Don't forget to join a good society, by doing so you will gain more information in a few months than in years of stopping at home and thinking that you know all there is to be learnt. Don't put unhealthy birds up to breed. Don't forget that dandelion, groundsel, and chickweed are amongst the best green foods, and don't forget to gather your green food first thing in the morning. Don't omit to give linseed to the hens while they are feeding their young, to be up early in the morning during the breeding season, and to give clean water twice a day during the summer. Don't forget that if anything goes wrong in nine cases out of ten it is the breeder that is at fault, not the birds. Don't forget you have to find the cause before you discover a remedy, and that success depends upon the attention you give to your birds during the moult, for the quicker they moult the better colour they will come. Don't forget your better half can help you a great deal if you have to be away from home all day, and don't forget she wants some encouragement for doing so. Don't go mad if you happen to win at a bird show, and don't forget yourself if you get beaten. Don't forget to introduce Cage Birds to all your friends, and recommend them to read all the articles they find in it from week to week.

How to Catch Linnets.

Sir,—I was much interested in the article by W. C. Coward on "The Linnet and how to keep it." Would he be good enough to give us a few hints on how to catch our own?

Moulting British Birds on Wild Seed.

Sir,—Will some fancier be kind enough to let me know through the columns of Cage Birds whether they have moulted British hardbills entirely on wild seed, and with what result?

Now that the thistle, hard-heads, and plantain are coming along, the point raised presented itself to me. Thanking you.

"Shamrock."

"The Songster of the Night."

Sir,—It is with great pleasure that I endeavour to give Mr. A. W. Meek and Mr. H. Simmonds the information they ask for in the August 19th issue re Nightingales.

Permit me to say I do not wish to cram my method of feeding or opinions down anyone, nor do I say that anyone who feeds his birds differently or who holds an opinion contrary to mine is in error. I have had so many strange experiences that I believe there is nothing finite in birdy matters, and that there is a vast ocean of avicultural knowledge yet unexplored.

Let me congratulate Mr. Meek on his successful first attempt at rearing 'Gales. It is a very difficult task to rear any nest of Warblers, as they require attention from 4 a.m. to 9 p.m. The young 'Gales should be completely through their moult by the middle of August in normal seasons. They start warbling soon after leaving the nest, and both sexes warble. The males warble a little louder and more continuously than the females. The inflation of the throat is also more noticeable. There are generally more males than females, say three males out of five nestlings. The males are slightly the longer.

They require when through the moult to be separately caged, or "the feathers will begin to fly." They act similarly to Robins in cage or aviary, and two males will rival the Kilkenny cats. Hand-reared birds pick up the song notes of other birds within their hearing. If Mr. Meek's birds were ten days old, or a little more, when he possessed them, they are likely to sing the Nightingale song in more perfection than if they were taken younger. In their wild state they only hear their male parent's song for half an hour each morning and evening, and those lessons have to last them their life-time.

They vary considerably in attainments; one bird may turn out a champion songster, whilst another out of the same nest may be a duffer. The song should increase in volume from now to October, if properly fed. About Christmas generally they are in full song. They do best kept in a temperature of 50 degrees or thereabouts.

Colour feeding, in my opinion, is "painting the lily and gilding refined gold." Mother Nature cannot be improved by any of man's futile attempts at betterment. Let the Canary men colour feed their birds if they choose. They are dealing entirely with one of man's artificial creations. Proper natural feeding, bathing, and cleanliness will bring natural sheen on the plumage, whilst your Natal peppers, etc., would only derange his liver and digestion and unfit him for song. Try it if you like with one, but I should not try to improve on natural colours.

The nestlings' tail feathers are easily broken. If any are broken, pull them out carefully, and they will soon be replaced. If you want one for a show specimen, make him take a mealworm from your fingers daily, also stroke his back occasionally and accustom him to be handled. Then they are charming pets.

The Nightingale-Blackcap cross can be attempted, but not performed. You see, sir, the 'Gale is a Thrush and a Blackcap is a Warbler. A 'Gale does not warble like a Blackcap or Garden Warbler, nor is its song an imitation of any other bird song. Its song, like to his bigger cousin, the Song Thrush, is simply original, incomparable, unequalled, deliberate, fiery, passionate passages of soul-stirring music. All the adjectives in the language cannot express for me the admiration I have for this little bird artist.

I don't think our Canary friends have yet succeeded, say, with a cross between Sparrow and Canary, and that would be more likely to succeed than 'Gale and Blackcap. 'Gale and Robin would be a nearer match. With hand-reared birds many more unlikely hybrids may be forthcoming. An aviary would have to be set apart entirely to the selected pair for any good result. Blackcaps build in low bushes and brambles, whilst 'Gales build on the ground or very near it. I have found two nests some six feet up a pollard elm.

The 'Gale has, I believe, been crossed with his nearest relative, the Sprosser or Greater Nightingale, "Greater" because of some ¼ inch in length. The Sprosser, only found along the Danube, has a mottled patch of feathers on the breast, and the resulting cross came like our ordinary 'Gales. This cross was of Continental origin. No other cross has yet been obtained, as far as my knowledge goes, but I am very willing to be corrected.

Cuttlefish bone is the best possible article to mix with soft food of either Hard or Softbills. It helps to form the bony structure, being lime, and takes the place of the beetles' and moths' wings, etc., in their natural menu. Insectivorous birds do not require grit, as they have no real gizzard—or grinding stomach—like a seed-eater, but they naturally swallow with their insect food a small quantity.

The egg question is a very long and ancient controversy, and I cannot now enter it. I should like at some future time to ruffle our Canary brethren with a few facts concerning it, but I shall wait till—

"After the hurly-burly's done,
When the battle's lost and won."

before I start that ink-spilling game. Suffice it to say that hard-boiled egg has lost me more young birds of all kinds than all other causes combined. The less it is used the better. I have proved it by rearing some nests with and some without it, and with its use I have had diarrhœa and partial blindness, etc. With adult birds it is different, and 'Gales can be kept on a diet of bread-crumb and hard-boiled eggs and ants' eggs. They will soon, however, have digestive troubles and go off song.

Mr. Jefferies, of Kidderminster, also used live ants' eggs which he gathered and cured himself; he also had a van load or so of cured wasp cake, so I think the two methods won't mislead. No egg, or very little, if you want song, and a bird to live six to ten years or more in confinement.

Ants' eggs are the sheet anchor at present of our Soft-bill dietary. I have kept in the best condition Softbills on these alone. The new or "live" ant cocoons are apparently relished by all kinds of birds. But the ants' eggs of commerce are sometimes very old and "musty," and their food value is about nil. If we could get reliable ants' eggs all the year round our bird keeping would have better results.

The only birds in nature that I have noticed frequenting ant-hills have been the game birds, Pheasants and Partridges, and the Woodpeckers, but I have seen the Swift, Swallow, House and Sand Martins hawking after the queen ants when they take their annual aerial flights in July and August.

If I have not answered your correspondents sufficiently I hope they will imitate Oliver Twist and ask for more. I did expect a slating from some of the "old hands" on one or two points in my article, and as I have not I suppose in the main they evidently are in agreement with me.

If I have made mistakes' concerning the 'Gale I am in the same boat as Mr. Lloyd George. In his speech at the Eisteddfod at Aberytswith on Aug. 17 the War Minister said: "It has been ordained that the best singer among the birds of Britain should give its song in the night, and according to legend that sweet song is a song of triumph over pain. There are no Nightingales this side of the Severn. Providence rarely wastes its gifts. We do not need this exquisite songster in Wales," etc., etc.

I do not like to differ from the Secretary for War, but for once I believe he is in error. 'Gales have bred in S. Wales. In Glamorgan and Monmouth (and Monmouth is in Wales, as Llewellyn would say) they have very often been observed, or I am much mistaken. Perhaps you, Sir, will kindly decide the matter.

One other matter and I have done. One bird enthusiast met me this last week and said, "I say, old boy, what 'Tommy rot' you have been writing to Cage Birds. You say in your article that you have only heard three Thrushes during the last ten years sing magnificently, and that out of thousands."

"That is a fact," I answered. "Why, all Thrushes and Nightingales sing the same song," said he. "They have it bred in them. One may sing a bit louder than another, that's all." That was my candid friend's belief. What could I answer? I simply said, "We all have a right to our opinions, and to stick to them. The next good Thrush you hear singing, listen carefully, and note his phrasing, his pauses and flourishes, etc. Go and listen to the same bird next day, and you will find he does not repeat his former song. No, Sir, I am quite sure a good Thrush never sings twice exactly alike. Ditto the 'Gale (the Songster of the Night)."

Fred Bent.

[It is certainly not correct to say that there are no Nightingales on the Welsh side of the Severn. Although Nightingales are not found in considerable number north of a line between the Severn and the Wash, yet occasionally they reach several Welsh counties. Nightingales have been recorded from Glamorgan, Denbigh, Flint, Carmarthen, Brecon, and Montgomery, not to mention Monmouth, which as often as not is spoken of as a Welsh county.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

The Evolution of the Yorkshire Canary.

By H. W. BATTYE.

A Chapter from "Yorkshire Canaries; how to Breed, Manage, and Exhibit." published by CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

We are told by writers of a quarter of a century or more ago, and I see no reason to differ from them on this point, that the Yorkshire Canary was the joint product in the main of the Lancashire Plainhead crossed with other varieties.

In some cases the Belgian, in others the Cinnamon, and in some instances the Norwich type of Canary was used with the Lancashire, just as individual fancy dictated, and all these crosses in the first instance produced faulty birds, the Belgian leaving traces of too much prominence of shoulder, thinness in neck, and stiltiness of leg.

While breeders were able by this cross to obtain style, carriage of wings and tail, along with slimness of waist and body, yet until the negative or bad points were bred out, the produce of this cross, though graceful and very smart and stylish, were not sufficiently straight to be considered typical Yorkshires.

Faults from the Lancashires.

The Lancashire Canary, too, had its faults, seeing that, though a much straighter bird, there were, perhaps, on the whole, as many or more faults on its side as the Belgian, viz., coarse head, heavy eyelash, or browing, thick bulky neck, strong thick legs, and bad wing carriage, as well as a superabundance of long and rather coarse feather, which resulted in frilled chests and feathery thighs.

These faults were so pronounced that the crossing with other varieties named failed to counteract them, and the result was that during the decade, say, from 1882 to 1892, far too many big cross-winged, long-feathered birds with broad, coarse heads and thick bulky necks were seen in the prize lists at our shows, and much dissatisfaction among the fanciers of this variety was expressed, especially towards the close of that decade.

Previous to that time, old fanciers had been at the other extreme, and used to talk about Yorkshires that were able to pass through an ordinary wedding ring, though I never saw one that looked like doing so, though many of them were very slim and pleasing to the eye, and perhaps preferable to the strong built, heavy feathered, half-bred Lancashire with its crossed wings and plain, ordinary carriage of body. Type or shape and position being acknowledged as the leading points of merit in an exhibition specimen of the Yorkshire bird, crossing with the Plainhead Norwich of that date could not fail to detract from the bird's merits in these essential points of shape and position, and did not assist in overcoming the heavy build and plain, straight lines of the Lancashire, but rather emphasized these very points by giving additional stoutness of body.

Better, but not Much.

The Norwich-Cum-Yorkshire bred birds though, were, at the same time, a decided improvement in regard to quality and silkiness of feather, and colour was enhanced in the offspring, but, taking both the good and the bad points of this cross and weighing both impartially, I should not consider the Lancashire and Norwich cross a success, at any rate, as regards producing a bird of the required shape and position.

Thirty years ago one occasionally came across a Cinnamon Marked Yorkshire, and I am of opinion that these birds were at that time mostly bred from a self Cinnamon cock and a Clear or Ticked Yorkshire hen.

Here was a much better opportunity to produce birds of the required shape than with the Norwich cross, seeing that at the time named many self Cinnamons of Yorkshire type were bred and exhibited in the same classes as the self Cinnamons of the Norwich type, the Cinnamon at that time having no recognised type. I well remember that when calculating the stage-room at our own show in the early eighties for this particular section, we usually allowed room for half open wire cages and half box cages.

This, the Cinnamon marked variety of the Yorkshire Canary, I as a fancier, greatly admired, and still take a deep interest in, and may say without egotism that I have done some little towards making known its usefulness in the breeding-room, and have assisted in other ways to its gaining its present popularity.

Though the above was most probably the way the bulk of them were bred at that time, many of them were lacking in type and style, and as no classification was provided, and no type was insisted upon, the birds had to be exhibited in the A.O.V. class, and were judged more for markings and quality than for type.

For some years the Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires were in very few hands, and competition was limited. Here the usefulness of the Union of Ornithological Societies in Yorkshire was in evidence. The Union took these birds up and decided that classes should be provided at Union shows for Cinnamon Marks, but stipulated that they should be Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, and be judged by their standard for this variety of the Yorkshire Canary. This was a wise step, for while not creating a new variety, they gave an impetus to a variety that was in danger of being extinguished for lack of support and encouragement.

How the Cinnamon Marks Grew.

From that time the bird has multiplied. Breeders became interested in producing them, and at the present day they are greatly admired by many of the visitors at our shows. They are gradually overhauling their dark-eyed brethren, the Yorkshire proper, in the matter of type, style, and position, and the Clears from this variety are responsible for much of the improved quality of feather shown in late years in the ordinary Yorkshire.

This many practical breeders and exhibitors will readily admit, whilst the artistic loveliness of a well marked, typical specimen of the Cinamon Marked Yorkshire appeals to all who are able to appreciate its beautiful markings and splendid shape along with fine quality of feather.

Classes for Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires were first provided at the Crystal Palace Company's 30th annual exhibition, held February 11 to 15, 1893, through the influence of the Yorkshire Union. Previously one class was provided for Variegated Cinnamons, any variety.

The Green Yorkshire of twenty years ago, was, to my mind, quite as handsome and as pure and rich in colour as the bulk of the present day birds, the Yellow Green's brilliant and lustrous colour not being mixed at that time so frequently with Cinnamon blood as it has been since.

The crossing of the pure Green Canary with self or cinnamon variegated birds, which was practised rather extensively some years ago, is, in my judgment, a decided mistake, and without doubt this injured the Green Canary so far as purity of colour was concerned.

The Danger in Cinnamon Crossing.

It is a fact that the crossing of Green with Cinnamon, or Cinnamon with Green, so far as my own practical experience has gone has, in most cases, resulted in a loss as regards soundness and purity of colour in selfs as well as in the markings of Green or Cinnamon marked birds.

The Greens are dull and smutty in colour, especially in the Buffs, and the Cinnamons from the same cross are "brassy" in Yellows and dirty looking drab in the Buffs. This has been my experience, and I have known others who have experienced the same results.

Take the Green Marked Yorkshire; many of these have a considerable amount of Cinnamon blood in their veins, and the markings in many cases are of a grey cast, some being between a shade of green and cinnamon. The same remarks in some instances will apply to the Cinnamon Marks. Some of these by having been crossed with Green Marked birds (in an endeavour in most cases to improve their type) are nearly what may be termed half green and half cinnamon in their markings.

These points will, in the near future, have to be considered, and if some who may doubt the above statements will observe the difference in the colour of a good many of our self-coloured Cinnamons and Greens and the markings on Green and Cinnamon Marked Yorkshires, it may be the means of convincing them that there are some grounds for the statement that seldom does the crossing of Cinnamon and Green improve the colour of either, but in the majority of instances is the means of injuring that colour. Another thing that may have done something towards spoiling a goodly number of Greens is the class for pied and broken Greens.

Much may be said by the breeders in favour of these classes as being an outlet for birds that are not perfect as self-coloured birds, and this may be, and no doubt is the reason which causes some to stick to the variety when otherwise they might drop it for some other variety or perhaps leave the Fancy altogether.

But these classes may also have a tendency to cause breeders to be more careless in their mating, and instead of their sole aim being to breed sound self-coloured Green birds, which should be the ambition of all Green breeders, they, instead of discarding birds with white feathers in wings and tail and those with light throats and vents, in too many instances keep and breed with them knowing that there is the chance of exhibiting them in these broken and pied classes.

Though I can hardly expect these classes will be dispensed with, it is only right to say that more encouragement might be given to the self-coloured or Green bird proper, and less to what can only be considered as wasters, the same as pied or broken Cinnamons. I never believe in offering any inducement to breed something we do not want, and the man who sets out to breed Green Yorkshires should not want to breed anything but self-coloured birds.

In spite of these drawbacks, which may, perhaps, be only imaginary on my part, the Green Yorkshire has made great progress as a Yorkshire, and is much better understood and far more popular than formerly, and its value as one of the fountains for colour breeding is more appreciated. For this much credit is due to the Green Canary Club.

The evenly-marked Yorkshire is the only variety of the Yorkshire Canary that has lost ground during the last twenty years. This to some may seem strange, as it undoubtedly is the most handsome and captivating of all the varieties of our handsome Yorkshire birds. Very seldom at the present day do we see a schedule where they can be exhibited except in the A.O.V. class, and only occasionally do we see a really good specimen there.

Amongst the reasons for their decadence is no doubt the necessity of their having in very many cases, in fact, nearly all, to be dressed or faked in order to win. The detection of these practices of the fine art of trimming and the severity of punishment, when caught, deter many from exhibiting, but the temptation is great when you have a bird with a pair of grand wings, one eye perfect, and the other nearly so and capable of being made so.

Another reason is the much better chance there is now of exhibiting faulty even-marked birds in the unevenly-marked classes, these classes having advanced as the evenly-marked classes have fallen away, and this has certainly had its influence on the evenly-marked Yorkshires' decreasing numbers.

DECEPTIVE EGGS.

At the last meeting of the British Ornithologists' Club many interesting examples of abnormality in eggs were discussed.

Mr. Langton exhibited two nests and eggs for identification. The first was supposed to be that of a Blackcap, the other that of a Redpoll. A discussion took place, and the consensus of opinion was that the supposed Blackcap's eggs were those of a Yellowhammer, and the eggs attributed to the Redpoll really belonged to a Linnet.

Mr. Witherby exhibited a Great Tit's egg which was completely covered with some black substance. The egg had been sent to him by Mr. J. H. Gurney, with the following remarks:—"I am sending you an egg from a Great Tit's nest at Great Malton Rectory, stained black. The Rev. N. W. Paine informs me that there were eight in the nest, all covered over like this one; the nest was in a fork of a tree and open to the sky, which may account for some exudations having got into it."

Mr. R. H. Read exhibited a series of eggs of British Thrushes, mostly Song Thrush, Mistle Thrush, and Blackbird—among which were many handsomely marked sets which were much admired. Interesting eggs of the Song Thrush were a pure white egg with rust-red and dark red spots which Mr. Read had obtained this year in Sussex, a set of seven spotless blue eggs, a set of three deserted eggs with Cuckoo's egg, and set of two with three Hedge Sparrow's eggs in the same nest. Among the Missel Thrushes' eggs were some heavily blotched and others spotted with bright red from the apple orchards of Somerset. Among the Blackbirds' eggs were a set of five—four of which were a pure, bright, spotless blue, the fifth being faintly spotted—taken on the ground in Essex, and another set in which the ground-colour was entirely hidden by the red-brown markings. These latter were taken in Scotland close to where Mr. Read found, on the same day, a set of red eggs of the Sedge Warbler. Although, generally speaking, the eggs of these three species were readily distinguishable in clutches, yet from each species individual eggs could be selected, both spotless and spotted or blotched, with rust-red markings of which it would be very difficult, and in some cases impossible, to say to which of the three species they belonged.—"Yorkshire Post."

THE BEARDED TIT.

When alarmed in their haunts by any sudden sound, they utter this shrill, musical note and creep down and conceal themselves at the bottom of the reeds. Were it not for their note betraying them, as one observer remarks, they would be still more seldom seen.

The nest of the Bearded Tit is open and cup-shaped, and is composed of the leaves of the reed mingled with sedge and grass, and lined with the tops of the reed. It is generally placed near the ground in a bed of broken down reeds, or among nettles, or other herbage.

The eggs are from four to eight in number, they are white and minutely marked with reddish-brown, but they vary greatly in the extent of the markings, although not in general colour.

This little bird is much more abundant on the Continent than with us, and apparently has a wide range extending to Asia Minor. Our caged specimens are supplied chiefly from Holland, where the species is pretty common.

As has already been remarked, it is a fairly hardy bird in confinement, and as to its attractiveness as a cage bird I cannot do better than quote the testimony of the ornithologist, Blyth, who made a special study of this species in captivity, and who remarks that it is unceasingly active, fond of society and of using its shrill voice.

If three or four are kept together, they are most amusing. One will often hang by one leg from the top of the cage, if it is all wire, and scratch the heads of its fellow prisoners with the other. They have a habit of placing one foot upon the food they are eating, and will jump into the seed pan and scrape among the food like a barn-door fowl.

One specimen which the above gentleman kept, although it had no idea of hammering at a hempseed as a Tit does, would wait patiently close by, while one of those birds broke open the seed, and then try to make off with the contents.

On the ground it walks like a Chaffinch, instead of hopping, and in its wild haunts has been seen to run like a Wagtail over the broad leaves of water plants and on the ice in winter.

Although still commonly called a Tit, it has apparently no close affinity to the genus Parus. It has been considered as more nearly allied to the Shrikes, and by some authorities, with perhaps more reason, to belong to a family which includes the Waxbills, Whydahs and other foreign birds.

OUTDOOR FOREIGN BIRD KEEPING.

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., etc.

(Reprinted from CAGE BIRDS, February, 1905.)

"CAN much be done with one aviary?" is a question frequently asked. Another is: "I have no indoor accommodation in which to winter my birds; what can I do with them?" To the first question I answer, most decidedly, Yes. To the second, my reply is, leave them out-of-doors and treat as indicated herein.

In the first place the bird lover must decide as to the course he intends to pursue. If breeding is to be the paramount aim, then he must content himself with small numbers and variety, say six, or at most seven pairs of birds, in an aviary of say 20 feet long, by 3 to 4 feet wide, and 6 to 8 feet high, open only at the front, which must face south or south-west.

Even then the young must be disposed of as they assume adult plumage, or a second enclosure made merely for flight purposes, otherwise they will upset their parents' breeding arrangements; in fact, almost nullify them.

The Charm of Foreign Bird Keeping.

On the other hand, if the bird lover decides on numbers and variety, then he can have in the same space 50, or even 60 birds. But while he will gather a lot of useful general information, and be continually charmed and interested with their quaint ways, love songs, dances, etc., the breeding experiences will be few and far between.

Under such conditions, however, I have reared numbers of Zebra and Ribbon Finches, Java Sparrows, Cockatiels, and similar so-called common stuff with interest and pleasure—if not profit. The latter is a minor consideration with the true bird lover; he is athirst for knowledge and information concerning his feathered friends, and counts not the cost of anything within his means that he may do so.

As to variety, what may I keep together? What I am about to say I am afraid many fanciers and aviculturists will consider very unorthodox, if not rank heresy. Be that as it may, I am simply stating what I have done, and if others will adopt the same precautions, they will succeed in the same, and possibly greater measure.

Now for the birds I have kept in the same enclosure. Waxbills in variety, including the small and beautiful Zebra or Golden-breasted, a fairly representative series of Mannikins, Grassfinches, Singing Finches, Stray Weavers, and a pair of Cockatiels.

A Necessary Caution.

Do not get some of all the above and loose them into your aviary straightaway; this would simply invite disaster. Get first some Waxbills, and let them have the aviary to themselves for a month, by that time they will know their way about and take care of themselves.

Then gradually introduce the others a pair at a time, watching carefully those of larger size till their demeanour can be ascertained. Most of the Grassfinches are safe, and the Mannikins are generally quite harmless, excepting, perhaps, the Magpie Mannikin, which had better be left out, unless the enclosure be very large, for although he seldom does much harm, in the event of a quarrel a blow from his powerful beak would be fatal, even to a bird fully his own size.

Saffron Finches must be introduced with caution, carefully watched, and at once removed if they become at all combative, and only one pair must be kept. But in spite of the evil reputation they enjoy, I have had an amiable pair for several years, which have never done any mischief.

The same care must be exercised as to Weavers, and as they seldom attempt to breed, though they build numbers of their interesting and cleverly woven nests, it is well to limit the supply to two or three cocks, for instance, Orange, Madagascar, Napoleon, and Red-billed.

The Cockatiels should be introduced the second year; then they seldom do any mischief. Mine never have, and have reared some fine youngsters. Green Singing Finches and Pekin Robins are inveterate egg stealers, and often thus upset their companions' nesting arrangements, otherwise they are charming and interesting birds.

Now I can almost hear some reader exclaim: What about tragedies? Well, I never had any. The only deaths I ever had which I could attribute to violence were when I first introduced the Cockatiels.

No sooner had the larger Finches got over the scare caused by their introduction, than they commenced to mob them, and a Saffron and Greenfinch were mortally wounded in the scrimmage.

Peace After War.

The next day there was a declaration of peace, which has never since been broken, though six years have run their course, and many of the birds are still living.

Favourites? Well, I suppose, as students of bird life, we ought not to have any; however this may be, we are only human, and there are some that by their artless and confiding ways insinuate themselves into a first place in our affections.

At the head of these with me stand beautiful little Zebra or Golden-breasted Waxbills. Their taking ways, funny little love dance, fearless, happy and confiding demeanour under all circumstances, coupled with their hardiness, beauty and longevity, make them favourites almost anywhere.

Silverbills: These very pretty and entertaining birds, of quiet, dainty appearance, have a soft, sweet running sort of song. The quaint, ridiculous (from our standpoint) courting dance of the male, coupled with a trustful and confiding demeanour, make them favourites with all.

I have been surprised to find these birds usually described as exclusively Seed-eaters, and as never or scarcely ever touching green-food. This is not so. Mine certainly eat mealworms, gentles, and ants' cocoons; they also visit the soft-food saucer and daintily pick it over; they also regularly eat a little green-food, eagerly searching same for aphides, etc. This causes me to draw the conclusion that in common with all Finches, they largely rear their young on insect food; they have never bred in my aviary, evidently having too much company.

An Extended Selection.

While, speaking in general, Waxbills and the smaller Finches for obvious reasons most readily win their way with us, I must confess to a strong liking (some will, perhaps, think it depraved) for Mannikins. In a fair-sized aviary I find them active, entertaining, and full of interest with their quaint ways. Of course, in cages these birds are simply eaten up with ennui and dull beyond description; but in the aviary, as aforestated, quite the reverse. The impudent, cheeky, self-assertive little Zebra Finch, so active in blowing his own little trumpet, with his free breeding propensities, is a useful favourite.

There are many birds which, while lacking the seductive traits of those particularised above, yet command a place in our collections by reason of their rarity or little-known habits, striking or handsome plumage, or diversity between winter and summer dress. I will name a few, not going over a long list, but keeping in mind the aforesaid outdoor aviary mixed series.

Indigo and Nonpareil Buntings: I have not kept these together, and though they often disagree yet where space is not too limited they should not materially interfere one with the other.

Orange, Madagascar, and Red-billed Weavers: These are all showy, and also interesting birds for several reasons, such as diversity of summer and winter dress, and the curious and cleverly-woven nests they build all over the aviary.

The Turquoisine may be kept in lieu of the Cockatiels if preferred, or a pair of each if the aviary be not less than 30 feet long.

Mention must be made of the beautiful Chinese Quail; a pair of these should certainly be kept. They not only give variety, being ground birds, but practically live on the seed the other birds scatter on the floor; thus they not only charm, and cost almost nothing to keep, but also help to starve out the mice. These need soft food and a few insects.

Winter is usually looked upon as a trying time for the outdoor aviary—so it is for the bird lover attending to birdy wants—but for the birds I do not find it so. The real trying time is damp, wet weather, whether it occurs during the heat of summer, or cold of winter.

The Hardiness of Zebra Finches.

Dry cold does not hurt or cause suffering to the majority of foreign birds; at least they appear to feel it less than our natural Britishers. The little Zebra Waxbills I have seen during the sharp frosts and bitter winds of our winters take their tub regularly, and apparently as merry and happy as a lark can be.

Take an illustration from my note book. A young Zebra Finch began to moult in March, 1900, the weather being very rough and bitter. I simply should not have noticed this, as I just gave them their food and away again, but one of my sisters told me one of the Zebra Finches was looking queer, so I went and had a look at him. He came at once to the front branches, and though looking out of sorts, for he was in the thick of the moult, immediately blew his little trumpet with all the assurance and cheek in the world. I rewarded him with a mealworm and increased the proportion of egg in soft-food, and he was soon A1 again.

At moulting time I always increase insect food. All Waxbills and Finches are glad of it at this time, and I am convinced the brilliancy and lustre of their plumage are added to by its use. And a liberal supply of living insects is really essential to Weavers, Whydahs, etc., when changing from winter to summer dress. I may say that in my aviary the nest boxes only get an annual clean, yet red mite (the bane of indoor aviaries and cages) is unknown.

When to Introduce the Birds.

I wish to state clearly, in conclusion, that if birds are to remain out-of-doors all the winter, they should already have been there the greater part of the summer. It is simply murder to purchase newly-imported birds and turn them out in cold weather; they ought to be turned out in May, June, or July at latest, and then they will take no harm.

The foregoing details would apply equally to indoor cages and aviaries, with this exception, that while there must be good ventilation without draught, yet I certainly should consider the exclusion of frost necessary for the well-being of Foreign birds. It is an undoubted fact that birds which are indifferent to cold in a spacious outdoor aviary, part of which is open to the weather, are very susceptible to change of temperature when kept indoors.

Under such conditions they could be introduced at any time. I venture to hope this account of some of my experiences in keeping Foreign birds out-of-doors may induce to take up this delightful hobby some who hitherto have hesitated because they have had no indoor bird-room.

LLANRWST.

Show, Aug. 16. The birds were staged in a large tent and were well catered for. A good entry was recorded. No doubt the valuable cup was the draw. Considering the time of the year, the birds looked very well; in fact, too well. Some should have been in moult if they are to be at the front in the great advance in October. There were plenty of fanciers present, and the majority of them were in uniform. The stewards, Messrs. Tom Roberts, Nolan, Jones (Holyhead), Roberts Bros. (Bontnewyd) and others, whose names we did not get, gave the exhibits their undivided attention.

The cup winner was staged by Mr. Nolan (Menai Bridge). It is a good Yorkie and in the best of condition. The majority of the exhibits were good birds, but deep in moult. British were a choice lot, especially the winning Goldie, which was claimed for 60s.—a bargain.

There were many exhibits absent through delay on the railway. The Sec., Mr. Chambers, is a master hand in running a show. Those fanciers from a distance had permission to catch the 4.30 train in taking their birds from the show. Mr. J. W. Metcalfe (Liverpool) judged, and gave entire satisfaction. We hear he found another "Pride of Liverpool" in the winning Goldie.

NOR. YELL.: 1, J. Jones, eye mkd., rare head and neck, short and cobby; 2, Owens, varieg., massive bird, just a bit pinched in head. BUFF: 1, Jones, smart, clean-cut shap, neat head and broad back, well put down; 2, Owen, big bouncing bird, but long. YORKS YELL.: 1, spl, cup best in show, Nolan, rare type, straight as a gun barrel, cleanly moulded, sharp character, easy win; 2, Roberts, longer, very shapely, but in moult; 3, J. Jones, rare outlines, good back and wings, deep in moult; vhc, Roberts; hc, Owen. BUFF: 1, 3, Owen, beauties, very shooty, wedge shape, full of swank, put down in style; 2, Nolan, bit longer, shade weak at neck, capital pos.; vhc, Kershaw; absent, Roberts, two exhibits. UNFLIG.: 1, Kershaw, buff, topper for qual., A1 pos., sweet head and neck, straight as a rush; 2, J. Jones, Norwich, bonny head and neck, good wing carr., well finished behind; 3, Williams, yell, Yorks, very stylish, well up on leg, straight back, bit open in front. MULE OR HYB.: 1, Nolan, Goldf. Mule, capital size and col., yell., rare blaze and cond., 2nd Greenf. Mule, fails size and col. to winner, a good bird though; 3, no name, Goldie Mule, on the small side, nice cond. GOLDF.: 1, spl, hc, Tom Roberts, a wonder, magnificent square blaze, carried well back, rare tanning and buttons, will want stopping; 2, Williams, nice size and cond., good bars and buttons, excellent shape; 3, vhc, E. SOME BIRDS EXHIBITED AT THE LLANRWST SHOW.

By J. KERSHAW.

First of all it is to be admitted that Mr. Nolan fully deserved winning the challenge cup with his extraordinary good clear yellow Yorkshire, a bird of rare properties and standing like a guardsman. The runner-up was his splendid Waxwing, and we rather liked the statement made by Mr. Metcalfe when awarding the cup to the Canary, that it is easier to catch a good one than breed one. Mr. James Jones's clear 1916 buff Norwich, not over moult, looks like making a name. It has beautiful quality, plenty of size, and good shape. We thought that its legs might be a wee bit shorter; still, it's an excellent bird. The winner of the 1916 class for Canary A.V., a clear buff Yorks, shown by Geo. Kershaw, is another that shows promise of becoming famous, being most typical in shape and position, narrow, but well filled, and has a marble-like quality of feather.

In the Goldfinches Mr. T. Roberts won handsomely with a real good Finch of rare size and large square-cut blaze, with good body, depth, and shape. We heard this bird was sold during the day to a well-known enthusiast, Mr. Ed. Jones, of Carnarvon, for a good figure. The second, Mr. Williams, was a gem for shape and contrast in colour, and beaten only in size and depth of blaze colour. This bird was bought by Mr. Roberts, the winner of 1st in the class.

The Mule section was headed by Mr. Nolan's dark Goldie-Canary, a bird of rare size, deep body, and excellent colour and blaze. We cannot pass without mentioning two other birds. Mr. T. Owen's buff Yorkshire, winner in the buff class, is a bird of rare length, standing straight up, long-sided, and of most extraordinary quality of feather. The other is the 3rd prize clear yellow Yorks (Mr. Williams) in the 1916 class. This bird was not shown to the best advantage owing to the moult. It has a particularly good body, nice wedge shape, excellent side, plenty of length, and looks like moulting into a deep rich-coloured bird. This was a bird we liked much, and congratulate the owner on its possession.

Second annual N.F. show, Trades and Labour Council Room, Arygle Street, July 29, Judge, Mr. W. Mallinson (Liscard). Visitors noticed we had changed our rooms, as this room is quite capable of staging about 200 birds. Everything went off satisfactorily and entries came in splendidly. New members were made and quite held their own in Yorkshires. The Sec. is well blessed with having the assistance of a sterling committee, and everything was ready well in advance of the judging. Prize money paid out. Every bird was a credit to the B.C.F.A. Cl. Yell.: 1, Barr; 2, Greatrix; 3, Hall; vhc, Corbett; hc, Teare. Buff: 1, hc, Corbett; 2, Greatrix; 3, Hall; c, Barr. Mkd. CANARY QUERIES

RAPID LOSS OF FEATHERS (B. G.).—This is nothing to be alarmed at. The bird has simply dropped into a very active moult, and provided proper care is taken to protect it from direct draughts whilst it is very scantily clad, and also from sudden extremes of heat and cold, this rapid loss of feathers is most conducive to a quick and healthy moult. In addition to its usual seed diet give a small teaspoonful of egg-food or crushed sponge cake every second day for three or four weeks, and on the alternate days give a morsel of some sweet fruit or green wild seeds, such as plantain stalks or seed heads of shepherd's-purse, and a few blooms of marigolds or nasturtiums now and again will form a whole some change and find the bird something to pick at. Allow it to bathe freely, and if it seems to be very bare you would do well to keep a light cover thrown over the cage, especially at night, until the new plumage is well forward. When you can see the new feathers coming on the head and neck you may add to the drinking water 20 drops of chemical food two days in every three for a fortnight or so, to help it to throw off the effects of the moult.

TICKING NOISE (Borderer).—The slight ticking noise which the bird makes when at rest at night since it commenced moulting is probably not of very great importance, though there is just a chance that it is due to incipient bronchial trouble. In either case it usually disappears when the bird has quite got over the moult. In a great many cases it is merely due to the bird indulging a little too freely with the soft food usually supplied at the moulting season. See that it is not exposed to any direct draughts or rapid extremes of heat and cold. Then add to the water for three days six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and after this if the noise is still in evidence give five drops each oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a week.

CANARY QUERISTS

should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1½); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Aviories, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

COLOUR-FEEDING ROLLERS (Novice).—If properly carried out I do not suppose colour-feeding would adversely affect the song of Rollers in any way, though the breed is not, as a rule, colour-fed. Years ago I "fed" ordinary trained singing Rollers in common with practically all other varieties, and did not find any ill effects at all either in the general health or the singing powers of the birds. But I did not try it on highly-trained specimens, such as contest singers, though I see no reason why the effect upon them should be in any way different from the ordinary trained singers. The breed I found did not really "take" colour well, doubtless the result of so little attention being paid to the fundamental necessity of breeding for colour first, and then feeding for it afterwards.

WEAK ON LEGS (Nemo).—First of all, see that the bird has well-fitting perches that do not wobble about as it moves about on them, and that they are of a proper size and shape. The size should be such that the bird just fails to encircle them with its claws when it grips them. Give a staple diet of good, sound canary seed. In addition, give every second day half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on the alternate days three times a week a similar quantity of egg-food, crushed sponge cake, or bread and milk, ringing the changes on these three to make variety, and in either case mix three drops of cod liver oil emulsion with it each time, and continue giving it for a month. On two days each week give a small teaspoonful of a mixture equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, white millet, linseed and broken groats. Give green food three times a week and allow a fair amount of exercise.

DYING IN SHELL, ETC. (Vincent, Oxford).—(1) There are so many probabilities as to the cause of young dying in the shell that it is quite useless to speculate about it in the absence of any scrap of information as to how the birds are kept and treated. The eggs getting temporarily chilled or weakness of the germ are among the most frequent causes, but much depends upon the stage of incubation at which the embryos died, and of this, too, you give no clue. It is useless carrying on breeding operations further this season, so you had best get one of our handbooks and study its contents before next season commences, and see if you can discover anything in the treatment of your birds which is likely to be the cause of these abnormalities. (2) Here again it would have been much better if you had given details of your treatment. There is either some weak point in the management, or the bird is feeling the onset of the moult rather badly. Try the following treatment. Keep it in a bright and airy place, but not fully exposed to direct draughts, and do not hang it up high near the ceiling, in a window, nor where it is subject to sudden extremes of heat and cold. Give a staple diet of canary seed, on top of which give a pinch of summer rape each morning. In addition give separately a small teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake well sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give instead a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp (see that it is sound and sweet in the kernel), niger, white millet, teazle, linseed and broken groats. Give a few seed heads of shepherd's-purse, grasses, or plantain stalks daily. A few blooms of marigolds or nasturtiums may also be given for them to nibble at. In the drinking water for three consecutive days add ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea. Keep cage strewn with clean, gritty sand, and the food and water vessels scrupulously clean.

LOSS OF SIGHT (W. P.).—Sorry, but if the eyes show a milky-white disc in the centre of the pupils when you look into them the bird is suffering from cataract, and nothing whatever that you can do will be of the least avail in restoring the sight. The bird will soon learn to find its way about very cleverly and will live happily in its way, and probably sing fairly, but you should not in any circumstances attempt to breed with it again. It would have been much better to have kept it out of the breeding cage this year if you had the least idea that the eyes were becoming affected. There is undoubtedly a strong hereditary taint in this complaint, and the young bred from an affected bird are in a very large proportion of cases strongly predisposed to it, and not infrequently contract it at a very early age.

BIRD-HOUSE FROM DOVECOTE (Novice, Plymouth).—Judging from your written description I see no reason at all why your pigeon house should not make a very serviceable bird-house for breeding Norwich Canaries, especially if you see that it is first thoroughly overhauled, cleaned and disinfected. The northern aspect, whilst not ideal, is certainly in no way a disqualification, and the wall back, especially if plastered over smoothly, will be quite as good, or even better, than a wood one. It would have been an advantage if you had enclosed a rough sketch of the place, but I see no structural alteration that is really necessary to turn the place into a suitable bird-house.

A SUDDEN SEIZURE (D. M. A.).—The probability is that the bird had a sudden fright or some great excitement, which might have been of a temporary nature, which brought on an attack of effusion of blood or serous matter on to the brain or within the cranial bones causing pressure on the brain, and thereby, in either case, giving rise to the paralytic symptoms. You can do nothing in such a case, beyond keeping the bird as quiet as possible, giving a plain nourishing diet, and trust to Nature to repair the mischief in her own way. If the symptoms are still very bad, you may add to the water six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of opium daily for a week, but drugs are not of very much use in these cases. See that the bowels are kept rather free, but not too loose, by the addition of a sufficient quantity of succulent green salads to the dietary.

PECKING AT FEATHERS (A. R.).—This irritability is not uncommon with some birds just before the moult commences. In addition to the usual seed diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and then sprinkled with maw seed every second day for two or three weeks, and on the alternate days add a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, linseed or chopped sunflower, and broken groats. Give one or two plantain stalks or other wild green seeds daily. In the water on the days when you give the mixed seeds add ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, continuing this for as long a time as you do the sulphur. A morsel of cuttlefish in the wires for it to peck at would help to divert its attention from its plumage. Allow it to bathe as often as it likes. You may slightly anoint the bare spot where it pulls the feathers from with boracic ointment once or twice with an interval of two or three days between.

YOUNG DYING (J. C.).—The cause of the deaths as you describe is almost certainly to be found in the dietary, but you do not give sufficient details for me to say definitely just where the weak point is. I can, therefore, only reply in a general way. You must first of all see that the cages and all food and water vessels, especially the latter, are kept thoroughly clean, and strew the cage regularly with clean, gritty sand. Next examine your hemp, to see if it is sound and sweet in the kernel. If the kernel is brown or discoloured when it is broken open do not use it, as this alone would be sufficient to account for loss of young. Then give a staple diet of good sound canary, on top of which place a little summer rape each morning. In addition to this give a small teaspoonful of egg-food, or any biscuit food you may use as a substitute, sprinkled with maw each morning. In the afternoon remove any that remains, clean the vessel, and give in its place a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp (only good sound seed), niger, teazle, linseed or chopped sunflower seeds and broken groats or crushed plain biscuit. Occasionally the morning supply of soft food may be varied by an equal quantity of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, or an equal quantity of soaked rape, but if the latter is given care must be taken to see that it does not remain until sour, which takes but a short time in warm weather. Give a few seed heads of shepherd's-purse, plantain stalks, or marigold or nasturtium blooms for them to pick at daily. If the losses do not cease at once under this treatment, get the body of the next that dies examined by our post-mortem examiner to see if it is infectious.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

USING AVIARY FOR MULE BREEDING (G. Wood).—My experience has been that cage breeding has produced more young than aviary breeding, but of course anyone who possesses a nice building generally likes to make use of it for breeding purposes. You can use yours in either of the following ways:—Two hen Canaries with a Goldfinch and a Linnet as mates, or three hen Canaries with one Goldfinch. In the former case I would advise you to keep the pairs for a time in separate cages, they would not only get used to each other, but probably form an attachment, so that they would keep together when turned out. I would myself prefer the three hens with the Goldfinch; they would probably all go to nest, and the majority of eggs would be fertile if the Goldfinch was a healthy specimen, and properly fed.

STOCKING AN AVIARY (Anxious).—An aviary the size of 10ft. x 6ft. x 6ft. could be made exceedingly useful for the breeding of both Mules and Hybrids. Do not overcrowd, have a few birds in and treat them well, and then with luck you should have some success. I would advise the following:—Hen Bullfinch, two hen Greenfinches, six hen Canaries, three cock Goldfinches, one cock Linnet, one cock Siskin and one cock Redpoll or Twite. Have two seed hoppers filled with four parts Canary, two parts teazle, and one part summer rape. Give a few sunflower seeds daily and on alternate days a spoonful to each bird of the following mixed seeds: Hemp, niger, maw, dandelion, sesame, gold of pleasure, and thistle. Buy them separately and mix yourself. If you have any trouble in procuring them I would advise you to get wild seed put up in packet form, by some well-known firm.

TREATMENT OF BLACKBIRDS (S. G. Nelms).—You are wise in starting the bird hobby again, there is none to beat it, and I am pleased to hear of your success the first season. Now about your young Blackbirds. It is quite right for them to moult now, and the more ragged they are, and the more rapidly they do it, the better. They will moult all their feathers excepting their wings and tails and will probably commence to warble when nearly through. You appear to be feeding them well, the only alteration I would suggest is to discontinue the barley meal, it is fattening and heating; add an extra quantity of fine chicken meal to take its place. When they are nearly through, let them bathe frequently on suitable occasions, and see that the cage is dry before roosting time. Of course you will cage them off separately. I would advise you to send to this office for our Nutshell booklet No. 4, on the Thrush and Blackbird, post free 2½d. There is a lot of information in it that will be useful to you.

LINNET OR REDPOLL? (C. Parr).—Your bird might be either a Linnet or Redpoll as they both show red on breast and cap, but generally more pronounced in the Redpoll the first year of captivity. The latter is a smaller bird than the Linnet, shorter in build, more active, frequently clinging to the wires of the cage. Yours would be a cock bird and you could breed with it next season. The hen falling into the moult prevented your having any success this year. I have no doubt your cock bird will soon do the same, and commence to warble when he is through. He will be all right for muling next season.

VARIOUS QUESTIONS (B. Malkinson).—(1). There is scarcely any difference between the breeding of Linnet or Goldfinch Mules. Some fanciers are successful with one and fail with the other, although I fancy more succeed with the Goldfinch than the Linnet. (2). You can use the hen either way, there is no difference worth mentioning in the young. (3). Yes, autumn is the best time to procure British birds, directly they are through the moult. (4). About four pairs would be sufficient for breeding purposes. (5). You can please yourself, but I prefer to let them fly together at least a part of the winter. (6). You can turn in the British Birds with the Canaries, they will not fight, excepting an occasional "spar" over the food vessel.

KEEPING NIGHTINGALES IN IRELAND (Aurora).—There should not be any more difficulty in keeping the Nightingale in captivity in Ireland than in England. This bird is not nearly so robust as the Thrush, requires different treatment as regards food, and is of course more difficult to rear by hand. I think you would do well to send for our booklet No. 25 on the smaller insectivorous bird. It treats fully of the feeding and keeping of the different warblers, including the Nightingale. There is practically no difference between the cock and hen, or none that I could give you to be of any use in selecting one. To secure one you had better watch our advertisement columns. With luck one should reach you safely. It would have to be dispatched at a given time to catch boat connections, etc. (2). Hen Goldfinches are certainly valuable for Hybrid breeding, particularly when hand reared.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN (C.B.).—The birds you mention are not always safe with British Finches, but you could try one or two of the commoner ones.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

PARROT WITH SWOLLEN EYE (Jock, Alton).—The most probable cause is that the bird has been in a draught and has contracted a bad cold in the eye. Part of the remedy, of course, will be to avoid this in future. Bad eyes are no more uncommon in birds than in humans, and similar cases to yours are not infrequent, particularly in the summer time, when window and door are often open and the current of air passes through the bird's cage. Bathe the eye first with warm water to cleanse it, then with a dilute rose water and zinc eye solution, treat so daily till the trouble ceases, and keep the bird strictly out of draught. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intermediate days put chemical food in the water. Treat as above for three or four weeks, then report progress.

ZEBRA FINCHES (A. B. C.).—These charming little Australian Finches are most easily kept, and of all Foreign finches may be accounted the most hardy and prolific, though in every aviary some hens are lost annually from egg binding. Their menu is a most simple one, canary, white millet seed, millet sprays, and greenfood. When feeding young a little soft food may be supplied, but it is seldom eaten. Hay, fresh grass, and a little moss will supply them with all they require for nesting material. They like a large and deep box or husk for a nest receptacle, or they may construct a domed nest in the branches. In an aviary, whether naturally planted or otherwise, they go to nest almost at once, and usually have three broods each season. Of course, all birds require grit, cuttlebone, and water for drinking and bathing.

KEEPING AN ORIOLE (Oriolus).—These birds need a fairly roomy cage, and if it is at all wild it may be necessary to protect the wire front of cage with string netting, but usually it is only with adult caught birds that such precautions are necessary, as their confined quarters during transport to this country subdue their wildness to some extent, and till they are somewhat settled in their new home their quarters should not be unduly roomy; partially clipping one wing will check undue exuberance if they are put in an aviary. In one of my aviaries at the moment are a Maroon Oriole, Bank and Large Hill Mynahs, Thrushes, a Babbler, and young Pheasants, and they are all very steady. Their menu is not a difficult one, but ripe fruit and berries must loom largely in it; beside this, they need soft food and insects. I find tepid milk-sop excellent for newly arrived birds, but do not supply this as a regular item. Not difficult to keep fit once they are over importation troubles, but a generous live-food diet should be supplied during the period of the moult.

BREEDING RING-NECK PARRAKEETS (Ring-neck).—The main thing with this and similar species is to keep them in a place where they have room for wing exercise, as in my opinion not only inclination to breed, but the fertility of eggs, depends very largely thereupon. I have found them to breed just as freely in a covered aviary as in an open one, neither have I found them to resent being watched so long as the nest log or barrel was not examined too frequently. Their usual seed and greenfood menu satisfies them at this period, but fresh greenfood should be supplied twice daily, and a saucer of dry broken biscuits may also be supplied; some pairs partake of these freely when feeding young. A pair will often remain in an aviary two or more years before showing any should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1½); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.) "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Avadavats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." interest in the nest receptacle, and some pairs never do so, but if you have the luck to secure a breeding pair they usually bring up two broods annually without fuss or trouble.

BENGALESE NOT REARING YOUNG (Bengali).—The main trouble with these Mannikins is to get them to sit steadily; as a rule any young hatched out are usually reared on seed and greenfood alone, but if the parents show any inclination or craving for these it will be best to supply a few, though if they are in an open aviary which contains a few plants and bushes the flies, etc., they catch will usually be all the live food they need, and nothing more need be supplied. Many of the Mannikins are fond of picking over kibbled groats, and a tin of these may well be kept in the aviary during the breeding season. Fresh greenfood twice daily is important.

GREY PARROT MOULTING (W. C.).—I am pleased to note such good results. There is no need to alter its diet materially; see that it gets a constant supply, also that it is kept out of draught and runs no risk of getting a chill; at the same time it must get fresh air. The main thing to watch against at this time is constipation, but usually if the bird takes liberally of fruit this does not occur, nevertheless, at the least sign of the excreta becoming stiff or hard give it a mild laxative (one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia) in the drinking water. During the period of the moult well colour the drinking water with chemical food or byno-phosphates. Also during this period let it have biscuits and fruit freely, and if the moult should drag, or the bird show signs of weakness, lightly spread the biscuit with cod-liver oil emulsion.

TREATMENT FOR MYNAH (Mynah).—These birds are almost omnivorous, and it is easy to keep up a changeful dietary. The staple dietary will be insectile mixture (these birds like it moistened to a stiff paste), ripe fruit, and a few insects, but the following may all be given, are wholesome, and usually eaten with gusto: Rice pudding, milk sop, cake crumbs, cooked vegetable, and almost every insect pest the garden produces. Some individuals arrive in rather a debilitated condition, and need nursing up a little, but once over this period they are not difficult to keep fit, but their cage must be kept clean. As soon as they are tame enough not to be scared at your standing close, talk to them playfully and quietly, repeating words over and over again, and a young bird will soon begin to pick up words, etc.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

AMUSEMENT TAX (J. L. Smith).—Unless your society can get exemption, on the grounds mentioned on page 460 of our issue of Aug. 12, you will have to pay a tax of one penny on each ticket sold, or on each admission paid for at the doors.

LAUREL BERRIES FOR BIRDS (J. Sargent).—Wild birds eat many things that would be fatal to birds in cages, and laurel berries are one of these things. Further, it is possible that they eat poisonous berries when pressed by hunger, or in mistake for wholesome fruit, and pay the penalty unknown to us. Laurel berries would certainly be injurious to a captive Thrush or Blackbird. We should be glad if you could kindly let us know the issue of CAGE BIRDS in which, as you say, it was stated that berries did not grow on laurels. We might say, however, that we have never before seen laurel berries so fine as those you kindly send, nor have we before seen so many on a spray.

BIRD CATCHING (H. Shackleford).—No licence is needed for catching birds. All that you need do is to be careful to catch only those birds which are not protected in your district, and to commit no act either with call birds or fresh caught birds which would render you liable to a prosecution for cruelty to animals. Birds caught now, and properly treated, would certainly be fit for breeding from next year.

IDENTIFICATION OF WILD SEED (Holyhead).—We have submitted your samples to our botanical expert, and the report is as follows:—(1) Yellow Rattle (Rhinanthus Crista-galli); (2) Wild Parsnip (Pastinaca sativa); (3) Bladder Campion (Silene inflata); (4) Wild Carrot (Daucus Carota); (5) Devil's Bit Scabious (Scabiosa succisa); (6) Self-heal (Prunella vulgaris); (7) unable to identify; (8) Common Mithridate Pepperwort (Sepidium campestre), (akin to garden cress); (9) Sea Purslane (Atriplex portulacoides); (10) Yellow Goatsbeard (Tragopogan pratensis).

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your next breeding season a record in every way by purchasing now a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.

Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

There's Money in this Book for YOU

Only 1/- Down Brings It to Your Home

YOU can put money into your purse and help to establish the pre-eminence of British Canary Breeding with the aid of this wonderful Guide Book.

Hundreds of German and Austrian peasants made comfortable incomes out of the well-known Roller species before the war. Why should not the British Breeder contest this monopoly?

that tells you everything there is to know about Canaries, Canary Keeping, Breeding and Exhibiting. It shows you how you can turn a most interesting home hobby into a source of revenue and profit. The best methods of dieting, training, and rearing are all explained here. Every lover of these beautiful birds should possess a copy, for there is more money in Canaries than many imagine. British-bred Canaries can occupy the same place of pride as British horses, dogs and cattle. Write for particulars of "Our Canaries" to-day. 20-page Booklet Free.

380 Pages of Helpful Advice.
32 Handsome Coloured Plates.
133 Illustrations.

Descriptive Illustrated Booklet FREE.

"A Most Wonderful Volume."

Bourne Cottage, Totwick.

I received "Our Canaries" quite safely, and am delighted with it. It is a most wonderful volume, and is worth double its value. No Canary breeder should be without it.

(Signed) W. DYE.

"Truly Worth the Money."

19, Goldsmith Avenue,
Manor Park, Essex.

I must take the opportunity of saying how pleased I am with "Our Canaries." It fulfils in every way all that you say of it, and is truly worth the money charged for it.

DON'T

Be laughed at by the "Land Sharks" that are selling Hens for singing Cocks, and Parrakeets or fresh imported Parrots as "Talkers," for you see such people think themselves clever, whereas any fool can tell a silly lie. Well, then, if you must be tempted to try these so-called "bargains," take this good advice, and deposit the amount with Editor, in spite of all the fairy tales you may be told.

If you so desire, I can send my list of Canaries, Parrots, Budgerigars, etc., Post Free. I send all on approval.—RUDD, Specialist, Norwich.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

Members kindly note we are holding meetings every Thursday at 7 until further notice. Messrs. Hollingshead and Edwards were elected members, and will exhibit jointly in Yorkshires. Mr. James, Chairman, offered a singing Canary for the member who puts in the greatest attendance from now to our Open Young Bird Show next year. We were pleased to hear that Mrs. James is taking up British Bird keeping and has a few good ones moulting ready for the show season. Sec. received a very kind letter from Mrs. Lilian Dalton, Swansea, saying that her birds were packed and returned to Swansea in first-class condition, and promising better support at our next Open Show, Dec. 14.—A. H. C. Legg, Assist. Sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting Aug. 24, Seven Stars, St. John Street, Wolverhampton, Mr. J. H. Willows presiding over a good attendance. Through pressure of business Mr. H. G. Hill was unable to give his paper on "Training of the Roller Canary" as advertised, but thanks to Mr. W. G. Bird, members present were not disappointed, for he ably deputised on such a short notice. A very interesting time was spent, for his paper gave to our new members a clear insight how to train the Roller Canary for the show bench. A good discussion followed, and a vote of thanks given to Mr. Bird for his efforts. Members carefully note in the "Society Notices" column any alteration that may be made of monthly meetings. Since the meeting I have received notification from the Custom House, London, which will be of interest to other societies who intend having a show this season. "With reference to your letter of the 14th inst., I am directed by the Board of Customs and Exise to inform you that they have given the matter their careful consideration, but cannot agree that your Bird Show on 9, 10 Nov. next will fall within the exemption to which you refer. Stamped tickets of admission must therefore be used in order to comply with the law. These must be cancelled by being torn across the stamp at the moment of admission."—J. W. Thompson, Hon. Sec.

BORDER FANCY CANARY CLUB.

Second annual meeting of the Patronage Committee, held at 142, High Street, Edinburgh, Aug. 26, Mr. M. Jamieson, President, in the chair. Letter read from Mr. G. Bennet, Kelso, expressing regret at being unable to attend. Mr. Wm. Dods has been called up for military duties. Present: Messrs. J. Patterson, Sen., D. Hamilton, and J. Lumsden. The following open shows were granted patronage: Irvine, Barrow-in-Furness, Gateshead, Haddington, Muirkirk, Glasgow Red Cross, Cockermouth, and Brechin, Confined Shows; Leith, Cummoch, Kilmarnock, Camberslang, Wallsend, Loanhead, Coaltown of Wemyss, Pathhead (Kirkcaldy), Edinburgh Norwich and Mule Breeders' Society. This being all the applications to hand, the Committee decided to leave it open for a short time to enable other societies who have not yet decided, and it is hoped that all societies holding shows, either open or confined, and having the required classification, will make application for patronage at their earliest. The annual show in connection with the club will again be held in Edinburgh at New Year, and it is hoped that all members will make this show the success it deserves. Sec. was instructed to call a meeting of local fanciers. We have 50 new members this year, which is very good under present conditions, but there are still a number of old members from whom I should like to hear as soon as possible, as I am preparing the lists for the printer. Our President, the late sec., has been in very indifferent health for a long time, but I am sure the members will all join with me in wishing him a speedy and complete recovery.—B. Smart, sec.

PENY-GRAIG C.B.S.

Meeting Aug. 24, Butcher's Arms Hotel. Mr. Morris presided over a rather small attendance. Decided to have books handed over to new sec., Mr. T. Baker, 36, Ricketts Street, Cymmer, Porth, at next meeting, Sept. 19, and all correspondence should be addressed to him after the above date. We received the resignation of Mr. L. Hughes and Woods 13th July. So now, fanciers young and old, come forward and see if we can't make a success in Mid-Rhondda. New members are heartily invited to our next meeting to confirm Mr. Parry's proposition of holding a show on Jan. 4. Subs. are now due.—G. Padfield, asst. sec.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Meeting headquarters, Crown Hotel, Hill Street, a fair number present, Mr. Broadhurst chair. New members elected, Messrs. Greenwood, Kettle, Hawkesford; proposed, Messrs. Lewis and Greenhouse. Decided to hold members' show last Saturday in Oct, Roller section to join us. Sec., owing to circumstances over which he has no control, is forced to resign for the time being, and Mr. J. Bastock has kindly consented to fill the vacancy. We hope all members will give him the best support they possibly can, so as to keep the Society going ahead. Balance sheet to be presented next meeting, when we hope all members will do their utmost to be present. Several members did not come for their prize money won at the Nest Feather show. Will they please attend next meeting to receive same? Members joining now pay half year's sub. only.—A. C. Shirley.

HIGHGATE HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill, Aug. 21, Mr. P. Johnston chair, and a fair attendance. A feature of the evening was the election of five new members and the nomination of still another one. These welcome additions to our membership are very gratifying to the Committee, who, in spite of difficulties, have arranged a splendid programme for the year, and we hope on every possible occasion to have the pleasure of seeing all new (and old) members. We specially recommend our next event, a very topical one, and instructive too, Sept. 18, bird washing competition. Judge, Mr. W. Shakespeare. At the conclusion of business Mr. J. Hyde, our esteemed and energetic sec., gave an interesting lecture on "Berried Trees and Shrubs for Cage Birds," in which he enumerated all the berries and fruits upon which birds subsist in their wild state. Throughout his lecture Mr. Hyde gave evidence of a very practical knowledge of horticulture, in addition to his prowess at breeding Norwich Plainheads. A general discussion and inspection of some fine specimens of shrubs and trees followed, and at the conclusion a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer. —F. C. Knight.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting Aug. 26, Mr. Farrer presided over a good attendance. A deputation was received from the Sunderland Fanciers' (Tippler) Association, to arrange a joint show. The financial position was discussed, and an agreement come to. The Sunderland Homing Society's application was also discussed, and an offer of terms made to them for acceptance. Decided to hold the Members' Show, Dec. 26, in the Miners' Hall, Monkwearmouth. A letter has been received from Miners Sec. since the meeting, stating that the hall had been booked definitely to us. Sec. reported that the Northern Crest Club will hold their Annual Club Show on Dec. 26, at Miners' Hall, Monkwearmouth. Mr. Clark, who is judging the Crest Club Show will also judge Crests and C.B. in our Members' Classes. Decided to ask Mr. W. Reid to judge remaining classes. The Sec. having been called up for Military service, the duties will be taken over by Mr. Fred Riseborough, at present Assist. Sec. Classification for Members' Show was completed as follows:—Three young bird and two old bird classes in Norwich, Borders, Yorks., and Crests; three young and one old in Lizards and Cinnamons, and class each for Linnet (H.M.), Goldf., or Bullf. (H.M.); A.O. Finch or Bunting (H.M.), Linnet (F.M.), A.O. Finch or Bunting (F.M.), Mule (1916), Foreign, single or pairs. J. Peacock, Hon. Sec.

The Charm of Foreign Bird-Keeping.

By Miss DYDDGU HAMILTON.

Naming some beautiful varieties which are inexpensive to purchase, easy to keep, and which will breed freely in captivity.

NOT the least of the charms of bird keeping is that it appeals to all sorts and conditions of men. In this Fancy high and low, rich and poor, meet together in good fellowship on common ground, and this fact alone should, in the eyes of all reasonable men, be sufficient proof of the righteousness of domesticating at least such species of birds as conform readily and happily to cage life.

The true bird lover will undoubtedly prefer a large outdoor aviary, tenanted by rare and gorgeous birds, to a cage with its solitary Linnet or Lark, just as one would wish to own a fine garden with shady trees and green lawns and brilliant flower beds rather than a window box with its stunted and dusty geraniums and nasturtiums.

But how few, even of the privileged rich, can afford to indulge their taste to this extent. On the other hand, how many poor mortals condemned to pass their lives in narrow, dismal streets, derive infinite delight from a few cherished plants painfully grown in pots—or from a favourite cage bird, more dear and interesting to its careful owner because of the little daily sacrifices of time and trouble that are necessarily made by himself for its comfort.

Pets; Cheap and Charming.

In an essay, then, whose first requisite is practical utility, it would be senseless to write about palatial aviaries and rare and expensive birds. Rather let me endeavour to show how best to keep some few of those beautiful and charming little creatures which can be readily and cheaply bought, and easily kept in good health and perfect happiness on simple fare at a minimum cost of money.

First and foremost of these I would place the Bengalese. They are always on the market at a very moderate price, averaging about five shillings a pair. Having been bred for generations in captivity by the Japanese, they need no accustoming to cage life—they are absolutely tame and confiding from the first.

Nor is there any difficulty in choosing a true pair of these birds, though the plumage does not differ in the sexes. Only watch them for a few moments, and you will soon distinguish the cock bird by his funny antics. Stretching up to his utmost height, fanning out his tail, and quacking like a tiny duck, he dances round and round his little mate, who replies only by a gentle chirp.

The pair are bent on setting up house together, and they will quickly make a snug nest of dried grass or fine hay in the cocoanut shell or wicker travelling cage provided for the purpose. Four or five white eggs, much smaller than those of a Canary, but still large for the size of the bird, are laid, and the little hen sits steadily until they are hatched.

This readiness to nest, coupled with the infrequency of egg-binding, is one of their great attractions. They will also willingly mate and rear young with birds of allied species—with Silverbills, Nutmeg Finches, Bronze Mannikins, and even Java Sparrows. For this cause they should likewise find favour with the breeder of Hybrids.

One of the Very Best.

Superior in grace and beauty, but rather more delicate and difficult to keep, is the Cordon Bleu, or Crimson-eared Waxbill—a cheap bird, like the last, costing usually from three shillings and sixpence to six and sixpence the pair. These exquisite sprites come to us from Africa through France, and they are usually readily obtainable in spring and summer, which is the best time for buying them, as they are certainly sensitive to cold on their first arrival in this country.

The soft fawn colour of the upper part of these birds makes a lovely contrast with the forget-me-not blue of the throat and breast, which is further set off in the cock by the crimson beak and ear patches. They are among the most gracefully shaped and delicately coloured of all little birds, and whoever has seen them must love them.

They are devoted to each other—the little cock will, in defence of his mate or nest, attack birds quite ten times his size. His exceeding fierceness and loud, shrill voice generally leave him victorious in all such gallant combats. His love dance consists in jumping up and down rapidly and vigorously on his perch, singing loudly, while holding a long grass stem in his beak.

These Waxbills, if comfortably situated, will nest almost as readily as the Bengalese, but the hens are far more prone to egg-binding, and the young are far less often reared. Cordon Bleus are said to be apt to eat each other's feathers, and to die of decline, but I have never known this happen when they have been supplied, as they always should be, with small flies and insects, such as ants and greenfly.

If the fancier does not care for the trouble of rearing young birds, but prefers to keep one feathered pet for the beauty of his plumage or song alone—he has a plentiful choice among the Foreigners. One, combining both these qualities in a high degree, is the American Nonpareil Bunting.

A Living Rainbow.

There is nothing in bird-land more brilliant than his plumage, nor sweeter than his voice. Bright blue head, moss green back, and crimson breast, with a song approaching that of our own Blackcap. What more can heart of bird lover desire? This living rainbow can always be bought in the summer months for the modest sum of seven shillings and sixpence!

Other gorgeous and most interesting bachelor birds are the Weavers, or Bishops, in vestments of orange, crimson, or black and gold velvet. Who that looks upon them is not compelled to admiration?

For songsters there are the Alario Finch—the Green and the Grey Singing Finches, the Silverbill, the Avadavat—and many more—all obtainable for a few shillings each. But space is limited, and I must not wait to describe these, as housing and food claim attention.

Whatever the bird chosen, let his home be the largest the space available will allow. No bird can be well or happy in a cage where he is unable to use his wings to some slight extent at least. Three feet long by two feet high, by one and a half feet wide, is a good sized cage for any of the little birds mentioned above.

The perches should be of different thickness, and kept scrupulously clean, to avoid sore feet. For many reasons I prefer for perches natural branches with the bark on. These can be frequently changed and replaced by fresh ones, of which any number can be picked up in the parks after a windy night.

Food and water vessels should be inside the cage, but so situated that the birds' droppings shall not fall into them—that is, they should never be placed under a perch. The bath (an essential to the comfort of all birds) should be in a special bath cage, hung over the open door for an hour or so every fine day.

The Foreigners' Simple Dietary.

For food, all these small Foreign birds should have spray millet, canary seed and white millet, and all through the summer a plentiful supply of fresh flowering grass and small insects. The grass is quite easily obtained, even in London, either as Lark turfs, or gathered (it must not be uprooted) in the parks.

These outdoor excursions in search of provisions for the birds are both healthy and pleasant, and the busiest may find time for them in the long summer evenings or on Sunday afternoons. Then it is that ever watchful and interested little children will draw near and shyly offer the bundle of sticks or handful of grass it has taken all their playtime to gather. Or a friendly gardener will let you ransack his barrow for the roots of grass, daisy and dandelion, so greatly appreciated by the little feathered captives.

And this brings me again to my starting point, which was that bird keeping should by all means be encouraged, because not only is it a delightful pastime in itself, but, above all, because it engenders sympathy and helpfulness between man and man, and is altogether humanising and warming to the heart

Please let it be known that we have engaged the well-known judge, Mr. J. C. Barnes, to judge our open show on Nov. 11, writes Mr. Geo. Sawer, sec. Alfreton C.B.S.

I have kept birds of various kinds in a haphazard kind of way for several years, writes a new reader from Wigan, but it was not until a few days ago that I had the pleasure and good luck of meeting with your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, which I regard as a real "find," for it is a mine of information and advice.

The North Yorkshire and South Durham Federation of C.B.S. are holding an open show at West Hartlepool on Nov. 4, write Messrs. Watson and Wright, show secs. Judges: Messrs. T. Wright and G. Simeson, York Canaries; C. Waters, Sunderland, the remainder. 22 champion Canary classes, 22 novice, 14 champion British, 1 novice, 2 Mules, 2 Foreign. Second show New Year's Day, at Darlington.

Butcher Birds as Policemen.

Mr. M. Sherrie, in the Sydney "Morning Herald," says:—"In raiding a Magpie's nest to secure young birds, a couple of bush boys waited until the adults were off at a considerable distance, as these birds in protecting their young will give intruders a very lively time. In this case the boys, thinking the coast clear, set about the task of capturing the young Magpies, when they were surprised and disconcerted by a violent attack from a pair of Butcher birds. The attack was so vicious and so persistent that the raid was temporarily held up, and presently the adult Magpies returned to give battle also to the intruders. In the course of the busy few minutes which ensued, one of the boys received a stunning blow which penetrated his soft hat, and inflicted an ugly wound on his scalp. The ultimate outcome of the encounter was that those boys unanimously agreed that the young Magpies were not worth having.

OUR WEEKLY PRIZE FOR A LETTER.

ONCE again we have to express satisfaction at the manner in which our readers have met the offer of a prize of ten shillings each week for the best letter published in our correspondence columns. We were certain that many of our readers had things to write about which would be of interest, and that even in the strenuous time through which we are now passing they would find time to communicate their ideas for the benefit of other readers of the only paper devoted to the hobby of bird-keeping.

Now that the ball has once been started rolling let us keep it going. At a time of the year when there are no open shows to make imperative demands on our space we can afford two pages to be devoted to correspondence, and it is for our readers to take advantage of the opportunity while it lasts.

Among the letters published this week are two from our esteemed contributor Mr. W. E. Teschemaker, and in a postscript to one of these he says, "Our Editor's idea of a weekly prize for the Correspondence Columns is excellent, but I am not a competitor." Here again we note with pleasure that we were right in supposing that among our readers were some who could contribute interesting letters, but who would not wish to enter in a competition for a money prize. Mr. Teschemaker is the first among these readers to let others have of his experiences, and it is to be hoped that many others who are similarly placed will follow the example. Any letter may be marked "not for competition," and it will be so endorsed when it is published.

The Nightingale in Wales.

Referring to Mr. Lloyd George's speech, the "South Wales Daily News" says:—"With regard to Mr. Lloyd George's poetic reference to the Nightingale in Wales, 'Naturalist' writes:—The Nightingale regularly visits and breeds in four or five out of the six counties of South Wales. During the past 30 years the Nightingale has been steadily coming westward through Wales. Some years ago its western limit was Glamorgan. Then it spread to Carmarthenshire, and in June, 1910, it was heard by two members of the Cardiff Naturalist Society, Messrs. W. Evans and M. A. Wright, in central Cardiganshire, three miles south of Tregaron, a record that was accepted by Dr. Ticehurst and other eminent naturalists as the bird's western limit in Great Britain. A year or so later it was heard by a reliable observer near Aberystwyth.

Another naturalist now submits that what we call Nightingales (the birds which sing in the spring) are Blackcaps. The Nightingale, he confidently avers, is never heard in Wales or near there. We are tempted after this to ask who and what are naturalists?"

Two Ways of Putting It.

In making the erroneous statement that there are no Nightingales on the Welsh side of the Severn, Mr. Lloyd George said: "Providence rarely wastes its gifts. We do not need this exquisite songster in Wales."

A correspondent to the London "Daily News and Leader" points out that so long ago as 1188 Archbishop Baldwin, who had made a toilsome journey through Wales in an endeavour to secure recruits for the Third Crusade, relieved his feelings by saying: "Wise bird, the Nightingale. We have been unwise enough to enter and go through this country."

Those who have enjoyed the delightful scenery of the Principality will differ from the Archbishop, while they may appreciate the mood which prompted the remark. Mr. Lloyd George's reference to Providence reminds us of the Sunday school teacher who informed her class that Providence was so beneficent that all the great cities of the world had great rivers running through them.

I thank you for the splendid picture of my clear cap hen Gold Lizard published May 27, writes Mrs. Burgess, and am sorry that long illness prevented me from writing sooner, for I value the bird very much, and the picture is a perfect one. This hen won at every show at which she was exhibited last year, winning in all 12 prizes and specials, including 1st at the Glasgow Red Cross Show and the Open Championship diploma in the A.O.V. section. She was bred by Mr. Rukin of Rawtenstall, and I have bred several good young from her this year. One of her sons looks ready for a place of honour like its father and mother. The father is a broken cap Silver cock, winner of the Novice Championship at the Lancashire and Lizard Show, 1915 and 1916. I am still an invalid, but my birds are, as they have always been, a great hope and pleasure to me. I look out for CAGE BIRDS regularly every week, and find it a very great help.

A Fawn Linnet Caught.

I have caught a rare Linnet hen, a nice fawn colour, the first I have caught, writes W. Gardner, Wisham. I have been an amateur bird catcher for 20 years, and a subscriber to CAGE BIRDS since it began, and have always found a ready sale for my birds. I wish your paper every success.

A Gentle Hint.

I was glad to read in last week's CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. F. Litchfield, that you have decided to offer prizes for letters on interesting subjects, and I hope it will be the means of your obtaining information for novices like myself, but (I do not know if you have noticed it) I think experienced Mule and Hybrid breeders are very reluctant to give away their secrets.

Perhaps, and Perhaps Not.

Bullfinches are said to be becoming much more numerous in the county of Cheshire. Commenting on this, "W. C.," in the "Manchester Dispatch," says, "The reason is not difficult to seek, for the war has taken away the bulk of the bird-catchers who harassed and killed off the birds by thousands during the winter months, and, in the absence of this danger, bird-life has had a peaceful time."

An Amicable Arrangement to Avoid Clashing.

Kindly intimate, writes Mr. W. Grewar, hon. sec. Lochgelly C.B.S., that we are holding our club show on Nov. 11, when Messrs. A. Chalmers, Kirkintilloch, and A. Storrar, Coaltown of Wemyss, will judge. Owing to our having clashed with Pathhead, Mr. J. Thomson, the secretary, and I have arranged that Pathhead will run their show on their old date, Nov. 25, and ours is to be on Nov. 11.

Help Wanted for Clapham Show.

Owing to so many of our patrons and members being away on war service, writes Mr. T. J. Hose, hon. sec. Clapham C.B.A., 5, Wells Street, Camberwell, S.E., we wish to appeal to the fancy generally, through CAGE BIRDS, for specials, either in kind or cash, for our annual open show (see dates fixed column), to be allotted at donor's wish, and published in our schedule. At the same time I should be glad if the secretaries of specialist clubs would be kind enough to forward me a list of members.

Bird Shows and the Amusement Tax.

Show secretaries should note the paragraph at the end of the report of the meeting of the Midland Roller C.C. published this week. As further information, it may be as well to explain that "stamped tickets of admission" means that each ticket should bear an adhesive stamp, which is purchasable at any post office. The stamp should be so affixed that the ticket can be torn through the stamp in order that the visitor to the show may retain a portion in case of enquiry from an inspector.

A Tall Homing Story.

"W. W. M." sends the following to the "Scotsman":—"A Cheviot farmer, with whom I was recently discussing the breeding places of the Raven in Hen's Hole, related a remarkable instance of the homing instinct of one of these birds when shorn of its power of flight. Going round his hill hirsel one morning, he observed a Raven alight beside a dead wedder. Suspecting from the appearance of its plumage and its reluctance to rise until closely approached that it was a tame bird, he made a 'girn' with a piece of string, and placing a bit of fat out from the dead sheep inside the noose, easily lured and captured it. The Raven's 'language'—it had been taught to talk—when it found itself held fast by the legs, was strongly flavoured with words unprintable, and it snapped and bit viciously. The farmer carried his captive home, and, after trimming its wings so that it could not fly, gave it the freedom of the place. After a few days, however, the Raven disappeared, and it was subsequently ascertained that it had turned up at its owner's home, having walked a distance of five miles over hill and valley."

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The attention of Show Secretaries is directed to the following list of gentlemen willing to act as Judges. Terms for insertion on application.

FRED ARCHER, 92, Wellington-st., Oakes, Huddersfield, judge of cage birds, specialist in Hybrids and British birds.

J. C. BARNES, 113, Northfield Road, Walkley, Sheffield. Judge of all varieties of cage birds. Long, practical experience. Terms moderate.

THOS. BENNETT, Judge of Cage Birds; life experience; terms moderate: 14, Cumberland-rd., Lidget Green, Bradford.

J. W. BRUCE, Coldstream. Judge of all varieties of cage birds; Border and British Bird specialist. Terms moderate.

W. A. COWGILL, 115, Washington Street, Girlington Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

GEO. GARDNER, 11, Haverstock Road, London, N.W. Judge of all kinds of Cage Birds.

G. HOBBS, 35, Queen's Road, Northampton, having retired from business, can judge Canaries and cage birds. 40 years breeder and exhibitor. Terms moderate.

J. HOLROYD, 27, Kingswood St., Gt. Horton, Bradford. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Practical experience. Terms moderate.

J. R. HOUGHTON, 21, Hatfield Road, Gloucester; judge of Canaries and Cage Birds; specialist in Norwich; terms moderate.

C. A. HOUSE, Briardene, Idle, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and other Cage Birds.

J. W. METCALFE, Yorkshire Aviaries, 68, Brunswick Road, Liverpool. Judge of Cage Birds, Specialist Yorks. and Norwich; terms moderate.

W. MUNDELL, 6, Carlisle Place, Manningham, Bradford. Judge of Canaries and Cage Birds.

H. NORMAN, The Eyrie, Salisbury Road, Carshalton, Surrey. All varieties of Cage Birds. Specialist Hybrids and British Birds.

J. PATTERSON, Chirnside. Judge of Cage Birds; all varieties. Wide, practical experience. Specialist Border Fancy Judge.

J. H. PAYNE, 17, Northgate Street, Gloucester, Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Cage Birds.

C. E. SILK, The Aviaries, Emsworth, Hants. Judge of all varieties of Cage Birds. Life experience.

JAMES STANGER, 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, Co. Durham. A.V., Spl., Nor. and Cr.

HENRY TAMS, Orchard Place, Longton, Staffs. Judge of Canaries, British and Foreign Birds. Twenty-five years' Breeder and Exhibitor.

S. TICKELL, 22, Honey Street, Bodmin. Judge of all varieties; specialist Norwich, Clnn. and Liz. Long practical experience. Terms moderate.

W. VARDY, The Aviaries, Bucknall Huthwaite, Notts. Judge of all varieties; specialist in Norwich Plainheads. Life experience. Terms moderate.

J. WILCOCK, The Fountain Inn, Eccleshill, nr. Bradford. Judge of Cage Birds, all varieties.

J. WALSH, Bird Specialist, Blackburn. Judge of Cage Birds all varieties. Specialist British, Foreign, Mules and Hybrids.

G. WILSON, 14, Frizington Rd., Frizington, Cumberland. Judge of Mules, Brit., For. Specialist, Brit., Mules. Life experience; terms moderate.

W. YOUNG, 25, Grosvenor Road, New Brighton. Judge of Cage Birds. Life experience. Terms moderate.

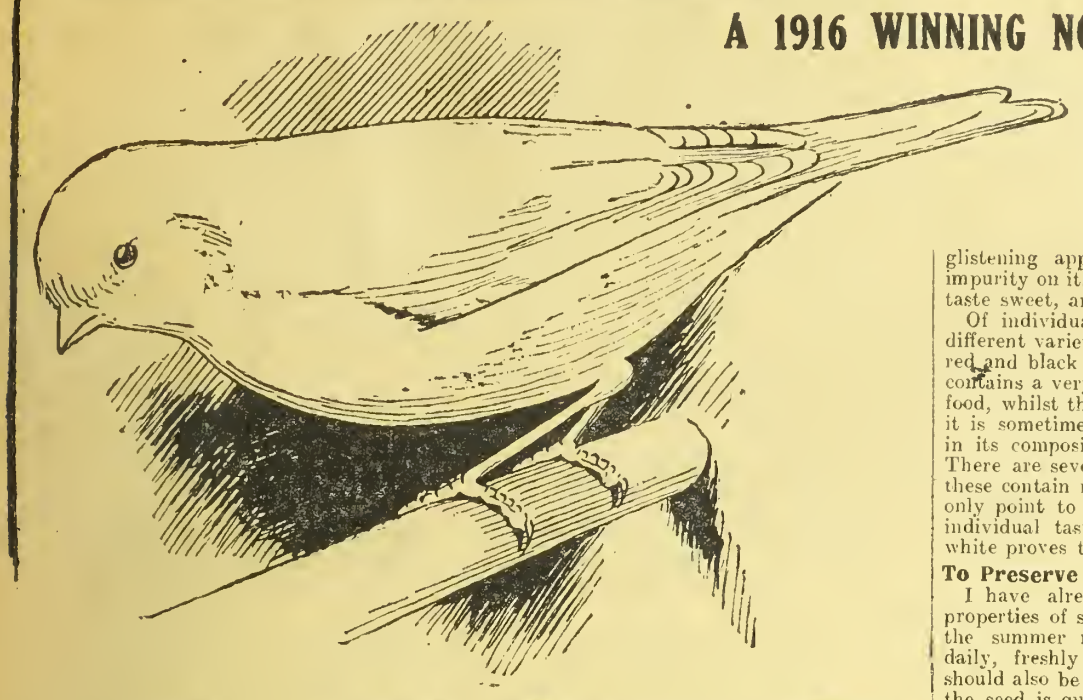
An Instructive Evening for London Canary Breeders.

Our September meeting is postponed until Tuesday night, Sept. 12, writes Mr. W. Hodgson, Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., when Mr. Frank Cole has promised to give us a lecture on the "Production of Colour." I need hardly say that anything Mr. Cole has to say on this subject will be particularly interesting and instructive, and members and fanciers will do well to bear this in mind, and turn up at the meeting in full force.



AUTUMN SONG.

Bird life deserves a good deal of attention at this time of the year, and much might be said about the songs and notes of various species. The Robin, which almost entirely lost his voice during July, has now recovered, and to-day we hear that tender autumn melody which catches the ear of most people. Every day it is more freely uttered, and is peculiarly sweet and winsome. The Willow Wren is also singing his autumn song, and it has been a good deal heard this month. The songs of both birds tell that summer is passing and autumn is ahead, but while the Robin remains our constant friend throughout the winter season the Willow Wren will soon leave us, flitting away south to some warmer winter clime.

A sign of the times is the awakening of the Starling, and now we see it, perched high on some tree or chimney-top, whistling and singing jubilantly. The Thrush became silent at the end of July, but the month of August never passes without our hearing a stray bird trying his song again—the song that we will hear henceforward during autumn and the milder days of winter. The writer heard a Thrush singing gently in the early morning of the 16th.

The autumn piping note of the Dunnock is heard this month, and the "ticking" note of the Robin. Titmice are more wakeful now, and the Coal Tit's song is not infrequent. Ringdoves continue their cooing notes in the woods. Among the pleasantest sounds of the countryside is the twittering of Swallows, and with an ever-increasing number of young birds on the wing we will hear the sound daily more and more.—"Manchester Evening News."

The Essentials of Aviculture.

By J. W. N.

A Series of comprehensive articles, which will embrace the proper management of all kinds of birds in captivity. The housing, feeding, general management, diseases, breeding of species and of Mules and Hybrids, and finally, the birds themselves will all be treated of as the series progresses.

THE feeding of birds divides with their housing the question of greatest importance in aviculture. Too often the bird owner has only a very haphazard knowledge of what are the real wants of his birds, and is content to find out some stock mixture which has been stated to be suitable for the bird or birds in his possession. This he doles out to them year in, year out, with perhaps an occasional change due to a talk with some equally uninformed friend.

Of course, there are many who make a thorough study of the individual needs of their birds, but these are generally breeders or exhibitors; even these rely too often on so-called "tips" jealously guarded and handed on with the greatest secrecy.

As it is the object of this chapter to point out how birds can successfully be fed, I have decided to devote a little space to showing how a properly balanced diet is necessary to maintain health; this is in the hope that it may create an interest in the main principles, the carrying out of which will be not a drudgery, but a pleasure, the result of a better understanding of our feathered pets.

The Principles of Food.

Food serves many purposes. First of all it replaces the waste of tissue that is continually taking place, and builds up new. Then, by the combustion in the tissues of the products of digestion, heat is given out to the animal, and this enables it to withstand altered conditions of temperature. Energy also is imparted at the same time as the heat formation, so that we see food is responsible for the condition and health of the bird.

Food is made up of bodies known as proteins, carbohydrates, fats, salts and water, and it is the giving of these in proper proportions that is the basis of an adequate diet. Proteins are responsible for the repair and building up of tissue; carbohydrates are the chief source of energy, although a certain amount of them can be converted into fat in times of need; and fats, by their oxidation, impart heat to the organism. Fat is a substance the excess of which is easily stored in various parts of the body to be used in case of emergency and it is a most important part of the diet.

The salts are necessary to keep the blood in its normal condition, as a certain amount is always being withdrawn from it, principally for the formation of the juices which convert the insoluble food that is swallowed into a soluble form, which is capable of being assimilated. Water is a necessary medium for holding these salts in solution, and, as it is a very large constituent of every cell in the body, its importance cannot be overestimated.

To ensure health, these bodies, or proximate principles as they are termed, must be combined in proper proportions, sufficient of each being present to ensure the adequate nourishment of the bird. It is in dealing with seeds that the greatest mistakes are likely to happen, so at this point I shall take the principal seeds in use and give roughly their composition.

Canary seed is very rich in carbohydrates, has a fair amount of protein, but is very deficient in oil or fat. Rape seed, on the other hand, has a high percentage of oil, but has little carbohydrate, and rather more protein than canary seed. It will be seen therefore why the usual stock mixture of two or three parts canary to one of rape is so popular for Canaries. Its mixture contains ample protein, carbohydrates, and fat, to maintain a healthy equilibrium of the body.

Niger seed is another seed which has a large amount of oil in its composition, with about the same amount of protein and carbohydrate as rape.

Hemp has rather more protein than canary seed, with a high percentage of oil and a little carbohydrate.

Linseed has about 60 per cent. of oil present, the remainder being nearly equally divided into proteins and carbohydrates.

Maw has almost as much oil as rape, and the quantities of carbohydrates and protein is also very similar.

Millet is even richer than canary seed in carbohydrates, and is equally deficient in oil and protein.

The Value of Wild Seeds.

The wild seeds, as dandelion, groundsel, thistle, plantain, shepherd's purse, teazle, etc., all contain a great deal of oil, and, what is nearly equally important, salts. This is the reason that these seeds prove so useful in getting a bird into condition. By their action on the internal organs they eliminate impurities, and by restoring the blood to its normal condition tend quickly to promote health.

From the foregoing rough analysis a proper and adequate diet can easily be constructed, taking two factors into account; first, the individual likes and dislikes of the bird, and then the presence of the three main food elements in proper proportion. A point also not to be lost sight of is that variety must be imparted to it. It is much better to give one or two kinds at one time, and make a frequent change, than to constantly give a mixture composed of half-a-dozen or more different sorts of seed.

The likes and dislikes of individual birds will be discussed in another chapter, and only stock mixtures described here. These form the basis of the diets of groups of birds, and so lessen the work of feeding where numbers have to be dealt with. In making up a stock mixture of seeds, those composing it should, it is hardly necessary to say, be of good quality. A poor seed is rejected by the birds, and is consequently wasted, and proves more expensive in the long run than a good brand.

Seed need not be of what is known as "the giant" variety. This is often more or less of a delusion, for on inspection the centre is found quite hollow, and the husk tough. Nevertheless, it should be plump, with a glistening appearance, and have no sign of impurity on it. Moreover, it should smell and taste sweet, and have very little dust with it.

Of individual seeds there are sometimes different varieties. There is, for example, the red and black rape. The red or summer rape contains a very bland oil which is an excellent food, whilst the black variety, or cole seed, as it is sometimes called, has a strong rank oil in its composition which is only an irritant. There are several varieties of millet also, but these contain no harmful ingredients, and the only point to be consulted with these is the individual taste of the birds. Usually the white proves the favourite.

To Preserve Wild Seeds for the Winter.

I have already mentioned the medicinal properties of some of the wild seeds. During the summer months these should be given daily, freshly gathered, but a large supply should also be prepared for winter use. When the seed is quite ripe, gather it and place it in paper bags, which should be hung in a position where they get the maximum of sun. It is important that seed should be thoroughly dry, otherwise it becomes mildewed and useless for feeding purposes. Where convenient, it is best to leave the bags hanging, and only use them one at a time as necessary.

Some of these seeds we have mentioned share with these wild seeds the property of acting medicinally. Maw is the seed of the opium poppy, and is especially useful in diarrhœa. Niger, being of such an oily nature, is an excellent preventative of egg-binding, and where a stimulant is required hemp is very useful.

It must be remembered, however, that in crushing hemp for the smaller species of birds, that the husk contains a narcotic, well-known in many tropical countries, and if this is amalgamated with the corn, it may have a decided effect. It is much better therefore to simply crack the seeds and the birds themselves will discard the husks.

The first stock mixture to be discussed is the one for Canaries. For the summer months, canary seed three parts and rape seed one part, is the most useful; while in the winter the proportion of rape seed can be increased until the mixture is composed of canary seed two parts and rape seed one part.

For British Finches the following, I think, is the best mixture: Canary seed three parts, teazle seed two parts, rape seed one part, linseed one part.

As a tit-bit and to bring them into condition, use equal parts of some or all of the following: Dandelion seed, thistle, maw, lettuce, sesame, gold of pleasure, hemp, and sunflower.

A Simple Menu for Foreigners.

Foreign birds as a rule are easily catered for in the matter of seeds. A Foreign Finch mixture would be: Canary two parts, millet two parts. Crushed oats one part, and paddy rice one part, can be added if desired.

Parrakeets require quite a different variety. The following is useful, but, of course, individual wants must be looked for and satisfied: Canary two parts, white millet two parts; oats one part, sunflower one part, hemp one part, wheat one part, shelled peanuts one part.

Dari is very often advocated for both Parrots and Parrakeets, but only a few birds seem to show any relish for it, so I have omitted it. It can, however, be added if a bird shows a liking for it.

The above mixture is useful for all Parrakeets above the size of Budgerigars. These latter are quite content if they have canary seed and white millet in equal parts.

The proper food for Parrots has long been a thorny subject, the only result of the controversy being a universal condemnation of the mixtures usually sold in packets and tins for the purpose. The more individualised the Parrot, the more variety does it seem to require. A mixture that can easily be added to or modified is here indicated: Canary seed one part, white millet seed one part, hemp two parts, maize one part, oats one part, sunflower one part, peanuts one part.

Many authorities consider that hemp and sunflower combined make too rich a food, so, if preferred, the mixture can be made without either. They can then be added as wanted—sunflower one day, hemp the next, being a good working basis.

Doves, British and Foreign, will thrive on the following, which is equally good for Quails: Canary two parts, white millet two parts, wheat one part, paddy rice one part, maize one part, hemp half part.

These, then, are a few stock mixtures. I must repeat that alone they are only capable of supporting life, and that to ensure health the items which I have included under "extras" in the chapter on "The Birds Themselves," must be used freely along with any others that the bird may show preference for.

Seed-eating birds are amongst the easiest to cater for, but when we come to the "Soft-bills," as they are popularly termed, we shall find that the food requires more preparation, and errors in diet are more likely to reflect themselves in the poor condition of the bird.

As soft food is the diet of nearly all young birds, the first description is one that is suitable for the parent birds while feeding their young, and also for the young birds themselves in the few weeks subsequent to their departure from the nest. Amongst Canary breeders the use of eggs for this purpose periodically becomes the subject of controversy, which at times assumes a very bitter nature.

The yolk of egg is an ideal food for young birds, and when mixed with a body rich in carbohydrates, such as bread or biscuit, is all that is required where insects do not form part of the diet of the adult. When this is so, some form of animal protein can easily be added, ants' eggs being most commonly employed.

No Spontaneous Generation.

Unfortunately, egg is an ideal medium for the culture of the bacillus of septic fever, and on this account is cut out of the diet by many breeders, who think the risk too great. In my opinion, this is a point that has never been properly investigated, and in all the controversies on the use of egg yolk I have never seen mention made of co-existing conditions.

The most usual statement has been that while using egg food the aviculturist had the misfortune to lose many birds, and that when some other form of soft food was substituted these losses ceased. To make the food employed the scapegoat, without eliminating the other conditions, which might be the cause, is a very unscientific way of dealing with the problem.

However good a medium egg may be for the growth of the bacillus this bacillus must be introduced into the birdroom in the first place before the egg yolk can form a culture for its growth. Where due care is taken to prevent contamination, and where a high degree of cleanliness is kept up, it is so unlikely for septic fever to occur that it seems inadvisable to neglect such a valuable food as egg on account of this risk.

How to Make and Use the Egg Food.

To make the egg food, the egg should be boiled quite hard, say, from 15 to 20 minutes, and left to cool, not putting it in cold water for this purpose. It is, therefore, advisable to boil all eggs the night previous to using, so that they can be quite cold by morning.

It is customary to use only the yolk, but after the first week the white can also be added, provided it be properly macerated. The difficulty in doing this is really the only disadvantage it possesses, and, of course, any lumps present would be very detrimental to the sensitive stomach of a young bird.

Stale bread, powdered very finely, is preferable to biscuit, but the latter can also be used if wished. A sieve with a very fine mesh is sold for the purpose of making this food, and is a splendid investment, ensuring a thorough admixture and preventing the presence of any large pieces of either egg or bread.

A small portion of egg, with a few breadcrumbs, is placed on it and rubbed through with a fork. When the whole of the egg has been thus employed, the rest of the breadcrumbs can be passed through until a resulting mixture of egg one part, breadcrumbs two parts, is obtained. This should be mixed in the plate with a fork, and the whole returned to the sieve for a second "pressing,"

No moisture will be found necessary except where the food is to be used for hand-rearing young birds, who require it fairly liquid for a few days; in such cases a few drops of sweet milk will be needed.

Correspondence.

Every week a Prize of Ten Shillings is given for what, in the opinion of the Editor of "CAGE BIRDS," is the best letter published under this heading. The letter may be on any subject; it may be a comment, for or against, on anything which is published in our pages, an opinion on the policy of our paper, or may have no reference whatever to anything which has already appeared. So long as it is on a "birdy" subject, and is original, it will be eligible to compete for the prize.

The Prize this week is awarded to Mrs. E. M. Sargeant, 290, Astwood Road, Rainbow Hill, Worcester.

Ringed Gull Identified.

SIR,—I regret the delay in replying to your letter of Aug. 23 regarding the ringed Gull shot at Pilling, but I have only just obtained details of this ring from my correspondent. The bird was a Lesser Black-backed Gull, and was ringed at Foulshaw, Westmorland, on July 14, 1916.

H. F. WITHERBY.

How to Use a Three-compartment Breeding Cage.

SIR,—In Mr. Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-Rooms, and Cages," and sometimes in CAGE BIRDS, it is stated that a three-compartment breeding cage may be used "for running a cock bird with two hens." For the benefit of novices I think it would be kind of some expert if he would occupy half a column in explaining just how that particular process should be carried out.

A NOVICE.

An Appreciation of a Good Thing.

SIR,—Kindly permit me through the medium of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to thank the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe for his most valuable address on How Societies can help their members. I have been a constant reader of CAGE BIRDS for a number of years, but I do not think that ever I read such a helpful lecture. I wish we had more such men in the Fancy. I hope that many societies will act upon the advice given; then we shall see societies flourish. Thanks are due also to you, sir, for your admirable suggestions.

Nesting of the Redstart.

Parents and Young Going to the Zoo.

SIR,—Owing to absence from home I was not able to catch the three Redstarts, recently mentioned, until the 24th inst., and I then found them dreadfully wild, after their summer in a large aviary. I had great difficulty in inducing them to eat anything in a cage. I hope, however, to send them to-morrow (30th August) to the Zoo, and have asked Mr. Seth Smith to keep them for ten days and then release them. Should any of your readers see them, they will notice that the young bird, bred in captivity, and which may be identified by the ring on its leg, is a larger and finer bird than either of its parents. I am hoping that the general public will take a more favourable view of aviculture if we can show that aviculture can do as well as nature, and, moreover, afford the student an opportunity of observing the nesting operations of a very shy species at close quarters and at his leisure.

W. E. TESCHEMAKER.

Wake Up, Newcastle C.B.S.

SIR,—The secretary of the Newcastle C.B.S. says that I just write as I talk; I think he must do the opposite. In some of his writings he seems very strange; for instance, he tells us to adhere to the Rules, and then says that if I had any sense I could see the Rules could not be carried out. I never said they could. Mr. Reid says that I am not telling the truth in saying that he let someone take the secretarial position for the two-days' show. Perhaps it has been an error on my part; I really meant that he wanted someone else to take his duties for the two-days' show on account of his holidays, while he himself was to retain the position as secretary.

Mr. Reid seems to be fishing, but he must go further afield before he gets a good catch. I see he is claiming me as one of the ten present at the meeting, and also suggesting that I have not paid my subscription; he appears to be seeking for some fresh information. I do not pose as a champion for any member, nor as a judge, and as regards being long in the proud position of champion, this has only extended just into the teens of years; still this is a fair innings. The next time I sell will be the first, and I hope that while I am selling them, if ever I do, none of them will die in the process. Still, seeing that there has been a meeting recently, and another one is to be held later, I hope things are into working order once more, and I wish success to Newcastle C.B.S.

ANXIOUS.

The Other End of the String.

SIR,—I notice in your issue of Aug. 26 Mr. J. R. Williams, of Llandudno, gave some information how to sex birds. I understand what he means about the silk thread, and where to put one end, but he does not say what is to be done with the other end. Is it to lie between the bird and the hand, or where? Perhaps he will be kind enough to say through your columns, and oblige.

"The Songster of the Night."

SIR,—My most grateful thanks are due to Mr. F. Bent for the trouble he has taken to answer the questions I asked about the Nightingale, and also to yourself for publishing at such length, when paper and printing are so high in price, but I am quite sure that both the article and the reply will benefit more than myself. I should like to inform Mr. Bent that my birds were taken at 12 days old, and were fed from daylight until 11 o'clock at night at intervals of two hours, and after the first few days no egg was used, for they did not seem to thrive very well on it.

They have heard no singing bird since they were taken, so no doubt the song will be pure Nightingale. Three of them, I am certain, are cocks, the fourth I am not so sure about. It sings, but not so lond as the others. Two of the birds are now through the moult, the others not quite. I had to cage them all separately at six weeks, as they fought so much. As regards colour feeding, none of them have been colour fed this year, and after what Mr. Bent says I shall not attempt it.

As to steadiness, nothing could be more so than they are. I can handle them anyhow. In fact, it was because they were so steady that the one I lost was killed. They were then allowed to come out and bath and to be fed, and one of them, after a bath, got on the floor, and was stepped on. As to the Nightingale-Blackcap cross, this I shall discard for the next season, anyhow, and try for the Nightingale-Robin cross instead. They will be given an aviary 10ft. long, 6½ft. high, 6ft. wide, and should anything come from it I will, of course, let you know full details and particulars. I have on more than one occasion seen the Robin, Wagtail, and Nightingale feeding on ant cocoons at the ant hills, especially if the ant hills have been turned over, so that they could get the cocoons easily. April 22 is the earliest date on which I have heard "The Songster of the Night."

An Indictment of Fresh Ants' Cocoons.

SIR,—I must apologise for making a somewhat belated reply to Mr. Bent, but I have been constantly away from home this summer, and have had so much business to attend to that I have not been able to spare much time for aviculture.

I must congratulate Mr. Bent on his excellent and original article. If only we could persuade others to write about their actual experiences, aviculture would make progress, but I am sorry to say that the majority of articles are anything but original. I notice that our Editor makes some scathing remarks about a correspondent who copied a letter verbatim from a back number of CAGE BIRDS, but what does he think of people who copy their articles from books and send them in as original contributions in order to make a little money?

I agree most fully with most of the points that Mr. Bent makes. I pointed out long ago in a contemporary, now defunct, that fresh "ants' eggs," which are drenched with formic acid, should not be given in large quantities to young birds, or the result is frequently diarrhœa. I was particularly impressed this season with the different measure of success that attended three broods of Lapland Buntings in my aviary. The first brood were fed solely by their mother, the father refusing to feed. After a few days the hen tired of hunting for insects, and stuffed the young only with fresh "ants' eggs." They all died. The second brood belonged to another cock and hen, both of which foraged, and they succeeded in rearing two young. The third brood, fed as the first, and by the hen alone, all died.

I fully agree also with Mr. Bent's remarks with regard to Nightingales not using "ants' eggs" for feeding their young. In an article in "British Birds" a few years since, which was supposed to bring our knowledge of this species right up to date, this was mentioned as a recognised habit of the Nightingale; but, apart from the fact that ants always nest in dry places and Nightingales generally in damp localities, who has seen a Nightingale breaking into an ants' nest, and how would the bird perform such a feat?

No doubt Mr. Bent is right in stating that birds vary greatly in their individual song, and that a really first class singer is rare, but, for all that, we cannot get away from the fact (which is surely very remarkable) that every species has a song which we can always recognise as distinctive of that species and of no other. A couple of years since the only song one heard in the streets was "Tipperary." As in the case of individual birds, some individuals sang it well and some badly; some could not recollect all the words and some forgot parts of the tune, but we could always recognise the song as "Tipperary."

In a few months, however, everyone became "fed up" with "Tipperary," and now we never hear it. But the Nightingale has been singing its own song for more than two thousand years, as we know from the fact that an early Greek writer recorded his impression of the song in words, and we can recognise it as the same song that we hear to-day.

This is the more remarkable because most species of birds can sing other songs if they wish. A young Roller of mine, which was brought up with some young Pekin Robins, could exactly reproduce the song of this species, and used to add to it most quaintly the distinctive call-notes, just as "Amen" is sung after a hymn in church.

The Giant Whydah sings a regular Weaver's song—a mixture of spluttering, hissing, and spitting noises, but a young cock Giant Whydah, hatched here, could give a really good imitation of a Blackcap. The usual song of the Virginian Cardinal consists of only three tours—"cheeo, cheeo; whit, whit, whit; churr churr," but a hand-reared Cardinal, most kindly given me by Mr. C. Harrison, of Tiverton, sang the song of our English Nightingale really well.

Mr. Bent is right on the mark when he suggests that the reason that so many aviculturists say that they prefer the song of a Canary to any other is that they have never heard anything better. No doubt this is also the reason why the worst class of German Rollers, unsaleable in Germany, used to find a ready market here.

Mr. Bent's discovery of five hen Nightingales mated with one cock is very interesting. In my own aviary a cock Blackcap mated with two hens and assisted in incubating both clutches, and Col. Coussmaker proved that the Swallow was sometimes a bigamist, but I do not think that any ornithologist has come across such a harem as the above among Passerine birds.

There are just two points which are open to criticism. I see that Mr. Bent says that the Sprosser is only found along the Danube. This species, however, has a very extensive range right across Russia to the distant Ural and Altai mountains, and is found in large areas of Germany, Denmark, Sweden, and Finland.

Secondly, I am doubtful whether the Nightingale can be sexed by colour, size, shape, style, eye, or any external characteristics. All Nightingale fanciers whom I have asked tell me that they have frequently made mistakes, and I may include in this category a Continental dealer with a European reputation for his knowledge of Softbills.

Outdoor Cages for British Birds.

SIR,—I am often asked by people who see my birds hung outside all the year round, "What birds do you keep?" I invite them to come and see, and they are astonished to see how healthy and full of song my birds are, so I thought my experience might be useful to many of your readers who cannot afford an aviary, and don't care to keep birds inside.

I make all my own cages, principally from boxes obtained from tradesmen, and also my own wire fronts. First, as to cages. These must be of good size, waterproof, and warm in winter, cool in summer. Sizes:—For Bullfinches: 18in. long by 14in. high by 11in. deep. For Goldfinches or Linnets: 18in. long by 12in. high by 9in. deep. For Siskins and Redpolls: 12in. long by 12in. high by 8in. deep. Mine are all box cages, of course, made of deal wood, 3-8ths in. thick, with removable wire fronts and loose sand trays. They are painted outside with two coats of chocolate paint, and varnished; coloured inside with distemper, green or blue; glass feeders and drinkers.

The cages are made waterproof as follows:—After giving the last coat of paint, and while still wet, take unbleached calico, tack down at bottom of back, leaving a margin an inch or so wide on either side, stretch tightly up to the top, tack again, then over to the front, tack again, and leave about five inches over to act as blind to shade from very hot sun, and to keep rain from drifting into front of cage. I then tack down the margin on the sides and top.

To make the blind, turn down a hem about ½in. wide, and stitch, afterwards pass a piece of stick through this, cut level at either end. Take two pieces of punched bar about 5 in. long, tack each piece at one end with a shoe rivet to the side of cage, about 4 inches from the top, and at the other end to the piece of wood running through the blind. The blind can then be raised or lowered at will. Give the whole of the calico two coats of white paint, and when quite dry varnish.

The cage is now waterproof, cool in summer, well protected in winter. Feed the birds as often advised in the British columns of CAGE BIRDS, not omitting plenty of green food and wild seeds when obtainable. Hang the cages against a south wall, except when the wind blows direct into cages, then remove to a sheltered position. Carry the cages indoors at night. Birds treated thus will remain healthy and in full song nearly the whole year round.

"Jack Corvus," a Wounded Rook, and a Successful Operation.

SIR,—It is now thirteen years since my first pet bird flew in at my bedroom window. It was a hen Thrush; it died in the winter, and because I mourned for it, next year some boys around brought me Thrushes, Blackbirds, Skylarks, Yellowhammers, Hedge Sparrows, Greenfinches, Chaffinches, and a Cuckoo (which lived five years). Some of them have only just died; a Blackbird at Christmas, the hen Skylark on her second clutch of eggs this summer, the Greenfinch last autumn, and a few days ago my most lovely singing Thrush. He sang night and morning, and often all day long, right up till the day before he died. I have now only the hen Yellowhammer left out of that first year's birds. He is in beautiful plumage yet. I suppose twelve years was a fair span of life for these birds, was it not?

This winter I had another strange pet brought me by my neighbour's boys, a wounded Rook, its right wing trailing on the ground, and very weak from want of food. The wound was at least a week old, perhaps much older.

Coming to the reasoning powers of birds, this one certainly seemed to possess a keen instinct or reason, refusing the most delicate morsels of raw beef, or cooked food, and taking only bread and milk, and continuing to do so until all the inflammation in the wing had abated. I bound the injured wing up to the body with a broad elastic band, at first over both wings, then under one and over the crippled one. The poor bird was very grateful, grew very tame, and would come to my hand for food. I believe the Thrush thought it was his old companion, the Blackbird, returned, and was as pleased as possible to see it strutting about the kitchen floor, calling to it, and capering about the cage. I still believe they have a way, by "telepathy" or otherwise, of communicating one with another, for this Rook never showed the least fright, neither did the Canary (that was feeding a very early nest of children) mind the presence of the stranger in the least.

After a time (some six weeks), when the bandage was taken off for good, I found the middle portion of the wing was stiffened to the top and the bone of the first joint displaced, so that the tip of the wing still hung down, and was much in the way, getting knocked, and swelling considerably, and hampering the bird in all ways, so I reluctantly decided it must come off. Unbelievable as it seems, "Jack Corvus" stood on my knee quite patiently while I drew the quills (I talked to him, and his bright eyes kept looking up and twinkling as saucy as you like), and then I quickly took the first joint of the wing off, bending it back, and snipping the sinews with a clean, sharp pair of scissors. I then bound the wing tightly with a wadding pad saturated in petroleum jelly, and stitched firmly to the feathers to keep it in place.

And a bird can look grateful, if it can't speak, as Jack did when he jumped down and found the heavy burden gone. It is quite healed now, and the new feathers are growing nicely. He is out of doors, and has the fowls' house all to himself, whilst they have to sleep in the open. He makes himself heard when he wants his breakfast, and bathes in a large dish till his glossy black coat shines again. He eats bread and butter, scraps of meat, and fish and raw potatoes, which he scoops out with his great beak, leaving only a thin shell.

It is funny that so many people mix up Crows and Rooks. Everyone said "Jack" was a Crow, hence his name, but I thought he was a Rook, and when I said so they would say, "Oh! they are all alike," so I just went to our museum to satisfy myself that it wasn't a Crow fallen out of a Rook's nest.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From a Prize Winner.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge with many thanks receipt of cheque 10s. 6d. for my answer to the prize question. I am sure readers of Cage Birds are well catered for in every way by the endeavours of yourself and staff in these very trying times, and, as I wrote when the price was increased, I would not be without the paper if it cost 6d., let alone the modest 2d. per week. I shall, when I can spare time, compete in your letter competition, and shall also again take pleasure (with your permission) in writing articles for insertion. I have had published during the last six or seven years over 20 different contributions, which, by the way, I always cut out and keep, and I hope to write many more. Kindest regards to you and your excellent staff, and continued success to Cage Birds.

W. Lidgett.

A Fifteen Years Old Redpoll.

Sir,—As I am very much interested in your weekly paper Cage Birds, and have been a constant reader for some few years, I thought I would write you about my Redpoll cock, which died this morning at the age of 15 years. He has spent all his time in an ordinary Lark cage in a small cottage window, not more than one yard square, and up to the last year, when he went blind in one eye only, he has kept all his faculties. Every summer for about six years he was a marvellous little songster, twittering all the day long. Perhaps this may interest some of your readers, and I should like to know if this is a record length of time for a Redpoll to live in captivity, or if it is common. I wish Cage Birds the success it so well deserves, and the best of progress for the capturing of the German trade. I am doing my own little bit in the Roller Fancy.

Three-ply Wood in Cage-making

A Novice Gets Four Nice Mulds from a Threepenny Greenfinch.

Sir,—I must thank both Mr. Neve and Mr. Southwood for replying to my query re nails holding in three-ply wood. I was undoubtedly under a misapprehension, and ought to have said the nails "might" not hold, as in point of fact I had not tried them. However, I trust they will forgive me for the error, and I will also bear in mind what they say about nails and get the right sort. I might add I am a raw novice, this being my first attempt at breeding. I have always been fond of animals, and have kept anything from a "cock Ferret" upwards, so I thought I would have a go at breeding. I bought a cock Greenfinch for threepence, and procured a Norwich hen; the result is four nice Mules out of two nests. I also had a Linnet and Canary paired, and got one youngster, which only lived a couple of days. I read Mr. Neve's article with great interest, and at once decided to scrap all my old cages of different sizes and have something worth looking at. If I can make the cages to look neat I shall be pleased, and no doubt it will afford Mr. Neve pleasure to know that he started a novice on the right track. If I go to Eastbourne next year for a holiday, as I did this, I shall certainly pop over and see his birds. In the meantime I will study my Cage Birds for more tips. I thank the two above-mentioned birdy chums once again.

Jock Hill.

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

Sir,—As a lover of cage birds, more especially the Norwich Plainhead, I feel I must enter the lists against the fallacy of inbreeding, which has been advocated so ably in recent issues of Cage Birds. I am doing this not only in the interests of the Norwich Plainhead itself, but also in the interest of the many young fanciers with shallow pockets who, to save expense, may be induced to pair a decent young bird up with its parent, with very indifferent results eight times out of every ten.

That the whole position is wrong is proved by the difference of opinion among the experts themselves, and I have not seen one deny that just as good results are to be obtained by breeding from unrelated pedigree stock.

I am convinced that stamina and vitality are only to be obtained that way, and they are most essential points in the make-up of the Norwich Plainhead, where the tendency is for larger and ever larger birds. Big bone, big skull, and big frame are the order of the day, and I refuse to believe that they are obtained by inbreeding, persistent or otherwise.

Mr. Gordon Stewart, a gentleman whom I know personally, and to whose love for the Norwich Plainhead I wish to testify, has gone far for comparisons (always odious) when he invites "Sub Rosa" to examine the stud books of the Great Danes, Wolfhounds, and Deerhounds, not to mention Highland cattle, and then compare results with the coddled Canary, coddled now for centuries.

He could hardly have selected two stronger, hardy, or more virile animals in the whole animal kingdom. He says "Like produces like." Why not read "sometimes" and complete the sentence? Why stop at Angus cattle? Why not go a little higher in the scale of vertebrates and examine the results of inbreeding among the blue bloods of his own species, of whom he should also know something? I suggest to advocates of inbreeding that when they have finished with the canine stud books they might also find something to astonish them among the stud books of their own species, moreover, with the whole resourcefulness of their species to help.

I make no apology for fetching the human biped into this discussion, but claim justification from the fact that any discussion as to the future welfare of the Norwich Plainhead, especially so far as stamina and vitality are concerned, demands the fullest and the widest possible scope. I know little about dogs or Angus cattle, but I do know something of the Norwich Plainhead, and I believe that the fallacy of inbreeding, if persisted in, can have nothing but harmful results to the Fancy. That there are more roads than one to the championship classes I am prepared to admit, but that inbreeding is one of them I hae ma doots.

80 Per Cent. Yellows—A Question of Colour.

Sir,—I have read with considerable interest the articles appearing in Cage Birds under the heading "The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding," and I remember years ago reading some very interesting articles on the subject by Mr. C. A. House in, I think it was, "The Homing World." The arguments convinced me in favour of inbreeding, but before I put it to the test I migrated to another part of the Kingdom, and gave up keeping live stock.

Mr. Crawhall deserves our best thanks for the open way he gives the Fancy the benefit of his experience; most fanciers of Mr. Crawhall's prominence as an exhibitor are silent on these subjects. Having given us much, I suppose it is only natural that we should want a little more, and I venture to suggest that the publication of a few pedigrees in detail of noted winners would be of great interest to many. It would be interesting from the colour point of view to me at present, for I am really curious to know if it takes what Mr. Allsopp calls "circus horses" to produce a decent colour, and even Yorkshires, I suppose, require a little colour to win in good company. It would also show us where the Lancashire comes in for size, and the Belgian for style, etc. By the way, what do the breeders of Lancashires do to keep up the size?

However, what I principally want to know is, is it necessary to breed with green or variegated birds to produce rich-coloured clears? My experience is very limited, but it all goes to show that it is a mistake to do so.

I bought in November, 1913, a pair of unflighted birds, a clear buff cock and a green-marked hen, marked eyes and wings. The following season I paired them together; I did not succeed in rearing any of the youngsters owing to the hen not feeding them after the first week or ten days, but they lived long enough to establish the fact that they were all marked or variegated.

Last season, that is, last year, I paired them again; this time she fed splendidly and reared the three, a green variegated cock, a cap-marked yellow hen, and a cinnamon ticked buff cock. In the second round I changed the cock, using another clear buff, with the result another variegated cock and a clear buff hen; one clear out of five, and the colour not a bit better than other clears I had bred from clears.

From another pair, a clear buff cock and clear yellow hen, I only got one nest last year; this had three in it, all hens, one clear buff and two yellows, both marked alike, a cinnamon splash round one eye. One of these this year, paired to a clear buff cock, has four youngsters, one eye-ticked, two clears, and one marked on head and one wing, showing the tendency of the colour to increase rather than to diminish.

I have a ticked buff hen bred from a pair of clears in 1914; her mother was also bred from a pair of clears. The tick on her neck is almost invisible, and yet, paired to a clear yellow cock, two out of her four youngsters were ticked, and, what's more remarkable, one was a cinnamon ticked cock and the other a dark-eyed thigh ticked hen, the other two being dark-eyed cocks. Thus two nests last year seemed to upset what I have often read, that pink-eyed cocks cannot be bred in this way.

This 1914 hen has two first-round youngsters this year, a green variegated cock and a cinnamon ticked hen. Second round, a (green) cap marked, both wings and one side of tail, looks like a hen, and the third round another variegated, a cock, I believe, all that hatched out. This hen was one out of a nest of four, as I said before, bred from clears; nevertheless, only one of the young was a clear one.

I could multiply the above instances, but I think these will suffice to show why I think that it is not necessary to introduce green or cinnamon blood to brighten the colour, but rather the reverse; it has a great tendency to introduce itself.

Perhaps the author of the following paragraph, or someone else, will enlighten us a little. Here it is; I take it from Cage Birds Annual for 1916:—"Many fanciers, like myself, have made it a life study to breed a high and pure-coloured yellow, and when properly crossed 80 per cent. of the progeny can be bred yellows, and, what is more, high-coloured yellows at that. Those yellows, or, I should say, this yellow blood when sold to others will give the same tone of colour, and not a few from selected strain have had to take a place on the top shelf."

How is it done? Is it inbreeding, or double yellowing, or both? I am inclined to think that Mr. Allsopp hit the nail on the head a little while ago in his article on "Colour in the Norwich Plainhead." Unfortunately, this gentleman's name seems to be something like the red rag to the bull whenever it appears in your columns.

I intended to try double yellowing for stock birds this season, but unfortunately the loss of three hens early in the season completely upset my plans for this season. With better luck in the future I hope to Live and Learn.

Sir,—Will Mr. Crawhall read my letters again and tell me by what process of reasoning he assumes that the letter last published knocks the bottom out of my argument? My attitude from the first has been that inbreeding is too risky for the novice, that only the best should be used, and those of the healthiest; and the letter mentioned bore out my contention to the letter.

In addition to being a Canary fancier, I keep Pigeons, poultry and Bantams, and I am also the secretary of a large Poultry and Pigeon Society; so my experience is not confined to Canaries, although I must confess to little knowledge of dogs and cows, and I have just read the experiences of a poultry fancier on inbreeding. This fancier never introduced fresh blood for seven years, and then he confessed that his stock appeared to be losing stamina. In the eighth year he purchased two fresh stock cocks, and from these two he bred two big winners which won at Haywards Heath and Birmingham. Isn't that a testimony to outcrossing?

Mr. Crawhall quotes from Mr. House's book that a certain breeder produced one show bird in six from unrelated stock, and one in four from related stock. We are not out to produce just show birds, but winners; and when I say winners, I mean those birds which are unbeatable, like the marked Yorkshire bred by Mr. Crisp, the buff Nor. hen of Mr. Sam Cook (since dead) and several exhibited by Mr. Crawshaw and others. It would be interesting to know whether any of the above birds were produced by inbreeding. It is a well known fact that Mr. Crisp was not one of its devotees, anyway. I understand that Dr. Gordon Stewart and "Invicta" are Pigeon fanciers, and at least Dr. Stewart is a self-confessed new recruit to the ranks of Canarydom. It will be interesting to read the true experiences of these two gentlemen in about seven years from now. I know Pigeons, but I know Canaries better, and I know that to compare the two from the standpoint of stamina is like comparing an army mule with a lady's Pekingese Spaniel.

Sub Rosa.

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me to make some remarks on this question, although an outsider of no experience in this direction worth recording.

I take Nature as my guide, the safest, and Nature is a great in-breeder. The human race, with its subdivisions into tribes, clans, communities, on continent, on islands especially, in dark, isolated portions of the earth has been mainly built up in this manner; blood relationship is there, and is demonstrated by oneness of type, character, speech, etc. The relationship is more distant according as numbers increase, but the intermingling of closely related individuals has produced that type from the beginning. In patriarchal days it was a rule of life to choose from your own blood. It is so with flowers, with the wild denizens of the forest, and it is so with birds. Nature in her wild state is an in-breeder. Birds move in flocks and many nest in communities. Look at our 100 year old Rookeries, are they not a common and clear illustration of how Nature builds up and maintains her families?

In Mr. T. R. Wallace's very interesting letter in this week's Cage Birds the paragraph commencing with the words "My conclusions" seems to go to the truth of the matter. By in-breeding you will, with skill, fix your type, and not only produce exhibition specimens but build up a strain of them. But you must do as Nature does; she throws out the weak and unfit, they die. We make the error by not doing so. Many, shall I not say most, of our finest specimens are unfit, but we cannot afford to do away with them; that is our reasoning, and so we keep them, doctor them, coddle them, and breed with them if we can by hook or by crook, and hence failure. Nature succeeds in perpetuating because she is ruthless; she is, moreover, patient and slow, and does not coddle.

In the case of the Roller Canary we breed in to fix the song; if we possess a good song, good style, etc., why not go on with the family on Nature's lines, cousin to cousin, and so on, perpetuating the style, throwing out the weak ones be they ever so fine songsters. The particular style and quality of song will, I assume, be there, and those characteristics will be stamped in the breed. To compensate for disappointments let us breed more, we shall thus not be obliged to pair up so closely, and incidentally, shall be assisting the trader to meet the coming big demand. The great master breeders of Rollers dreaded crossing; the new tours were evolved from their own inbred songsters; they noticed the variation in the young birds, set them aside to help one another in song, and then startled the world. I read of one the other day who in eight years only added one strange bird to his breeding stock and that was a hen; he was an inbreeder by conviction and in practice, and it could only have been under very special conditions that he broke his rule. Others, successful breeders, have persevered for many years longer and still go on. What is true for Rollers must be equally so for other varieties, and I venture to say that if faults are perpetuated it must be equally true that excellent points can be perpetuated. Nature takes no note as to points, unless they be diseases and deformities which she throws out, and I would here remark that some of the eccentricities and curiosities which have been highly standardised by experts for fanciers, be it in bird or animal, to breed up to in this enlightened age are nothing but glorified ugliness and distortion. What we need is a scheme of inbreeding for study, drawn up in a plain and simple way by a breeder who has practiced it and going back to the sixth generation, giving us his results, not only in quality from a show bench point of view, but information as to stamina, breeding capabilities, etc. It would be of great service to Canary breeders, I am sure. I would here remark that theories of heredity are of little use, unfortunately, to the Roller breeder; he has to work in the dark compared with his other Canary brethren because of the hidden song qualities of the hen. The breeder for excellency of form can see pretty well what he possesses in his hen, the Roller breeder can see nothing; he has to work on other lines and these lines are uncertain ones. For this we need a few contributors to give us more guidance, especially as it has become generally recognised that there is great potentiality for breeding good songsters latent in the hen.

Hy. W. Gutiérrez.

Sir,—I must congratulate Mr. T. R. Wallace on his very able, clearly expressed letter, and I can assure him that so long as he can put his opinions and experiences on paper only half as well as he has done on this occasion he never need feel any diffidence about writing them.

"Invicta" said, amongst other things which were equally true, "The fact is you want to get to understand your stock; even with inbred stock the pairings do not always hit as you wish," etc. I said that I preferred the father to daughter or mother to son mating, and had not tried brother to sister (although I should not hesitate to do so), and that as birds stand lower in the vertebrate scale than four-footed animals there is no reason why they should not be somewhat closer inbred.

In my opinion the higher the development you reach in the individual the more careful you would have to be in inbreeding from too close a relationship. Man is the most highly developed type in the animal kingdom, therefore it is necessary to exercise greater care in selecting his mate among his relations than it would be in, say, the horse, which is not so highly evolved. As birds come very much lower down in the scale, it can readily be seen that less care is necessary in selecting mates with a close relationship.

I hope I have made my meaning clearer, and I extend the fraternal hand of welcome to Mr. Wallace or any other fancier "frae the land o' cakes an brither Scots" who wishes for further information on a subject in which I am intensely interested. It is men of Mr. Wallace's type that we are all out to help, and I am sure he can rely on every word the Editor of Cage Birds has written, for he has shown me every courtesy and has corrected my English when and where it has been necessary, for which I tender him my sincere thanks.

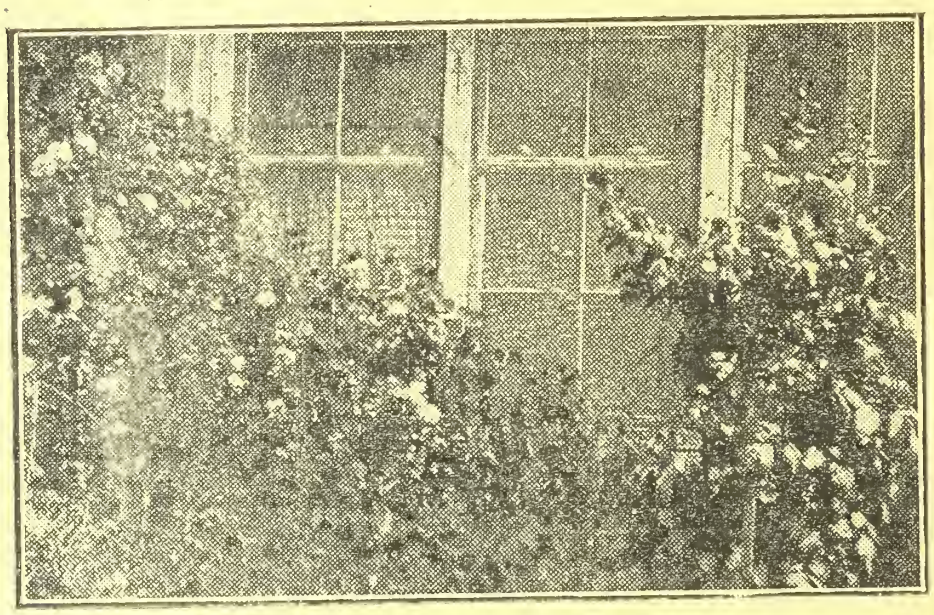
Roller Canary Breeding in California.

By DAVID O'BRIEN, San Francisco.

A breeder of ten years' experience describes the successful methods adopted in rearing Roller Canaries on the Colony System.



I CONSIDER the colony or out-door aviary system is without a doubt the best, cheapest, and least troublesome way to raise birds on a large scale, and capture the German trade.

To make money I would advise the beginner to start with some of the best Rollers he can get; they cost no more to feed, are as prolific as the common Canary, and command twice the price when put on the market. I have been breeding Rollers for the past ten years, in an outdoor aviary, a photo of which I enclose.

For the benefit of the beginner I take pleasure in describing my simple and successful way of breeding. In the garden I had built a wooden building, thirty-two feet long and fourteen wide; it stands on a foundation two feet from the ground to keep it dry and give the cats a chance to get under it after mice that happen along.

An Ideal Bird Room.

This building faces the south-east, so the birds get the morning sun, for they enjoy their morning sun bath. The thirty-two feet is divided into three rooms, one of eight feet, the others twelve each. The eight feet I use for a supply room, the next for the nesting room, and the third for the fly and feed room.

PORTION OF MR. O'BRIEN'S OUTDOOR AVIARY.

The walls are seven feet high, of one inch boards, surfaced on the inside and tar papered, and rustic on the outside, with a shingle roof which makes it as warm as an ordinary dwelling. It is painted on the outside and whitewashed on the inside.

There is running water in the outside room for the birds to drink and bathe in; the water faucet drips into a drinking cup, that over flows into the bath, and the bath overflows into the sand, as this third room has no flooring, just a sandy bottom which is easily kept clean.

Around under the floor of this room I have half inch galvanised wire-netting, eighteen inches deep, to prevent mice or gophers from coming through to the birds. I have it arranged with perches in front of the windows where the birds sit in the morning and enjoy their sun bath.

The floor of room two is covered with sand and crushed sea shells, one inch deep, and there is a box kept filled with old mortar. In room three there is a feed table about three feet by four, and on this stands two feed hoppers three feet long, one for canary seed, the other for summer rape. Other seeds I place in small dishes; hemp seed I never use at any time of the year, for I think it is too fattening for the Roller.

Some Mistakes and Their Lessons.

I will make the date of introducing the birds into their new home, Jan. 1, 1916, as I want to state my mistakes and misfortunes of the past season's breeding for the benefit of the beginner, and to indicate the changes I intend to make next season. On January 1 I let fly six cocks and eighteen hens. They got along nicely for a month, and by February 1 they commenced to fight and get very lively, chasing each other from room to room. At the middle of February I put up the nest boxes, twenty-four all around room two, seven feet high, so that the hens should not fight for the high nest box.

The year before this I collected a lot of dry chickweed stems, which I had found the birds were very fond of beginning their nests with. This I put in one net, deer-hair in another, charpie in another, and the birds' feathers from the moult of the previous year in another.

The Birds get a "Push" on.

The birds all got to work at once to see which would have their nest built first. They all took the coarse stuff first, some finished up with the hair, some with the charpie, and some with the feathers, I will say here that the charpie makes the best nest, for it keeps the hen cooler than the hair. As I have been breeding only for the sport of the game, I did not remove the eggs, as laid, which should have been done daily, and the eggs put in drawers, numbered to correspond with the nest boxes.

The nest box I use hangs on the wall, and is made thus: The bottom is of half-inch board, sugar pine if you have it, six inches square. A hole is cut in centre, three and a half inches, to let the nest fit in firmly, with the rim of the nest standing one inch above the board. Back eight inches high and six inches wide; one side the same height and width as the back, and the top is seven inches square. Two side pieces, two and a half inches high complete the wood for the box.

In nailing in the bottom it is placed one and a half inches from the lower edge of the back and side, to prevent the nest from touching the table when the box is taken down to change the eggs, or to have a daily look at the young ones to see that none have been trampled on by the hen. If such a misfortune should happen, it must be removed, or the smell will keep the hen from sitting on the nest.

When the 2½ inch strips are nailed on they make a nice perch for the hen to stand on while feeding the young birds in the nest, This will leave one inch space all around the nest inside the box, so that when the young birds reach their vent over the edge of the nest the droppings will fall clear overboard and leave the nest free from dirt and prevent the soiling of the hen's tail when sitting on the young birds after they are eight or ten days' old.

Can it be Bettered?

Experience led me to adopt this method after losing many a fine nest of young birds, through the hen refusing to sit on them at night on account of a dirty nest. This inch of space also saves the life of many a young bird that is thrown out of the nest when the hen is leaving, it may be under her wing, or she may catch it in her claw, young hens are not as cautious as older ones. If any fancier has a better nest box I would like to hear of it through CAGE BIRDS.

I use two parts cracker to one part egg, and I feed egg twice a day and lots of dry green stuff in the middle of the day; chickweed in seed they like best of any, the hens just load the little ones up on the seeded chickweed. I gather the food at noon so that it has time to get dry from the evening dew, for I find that wet greenstuff is dangerous for young birds under four or five days old. I continue the egg food until the birds are all through their moult, and I find it pays, as I do not know what it is to have a young bird go light from change of diet. The young birds have their bath when they feel like it from the time they are six weeks old.

I commenced the season in the aviary with six cocks and eighteen hens; they all built at the same time, and the result was that I had three or four nests of clear eggs. The six cocks were not able to get around so many hens building and laying at the same time. Some of the cocks showed their good sense in giving their undivided attention to one hen and her young, and such pairs always raised a nest of fine young ones. When the hen was sitting on her second round the cock was cramming the young ones until the second nest came out. This is what I think all good helpmates should do, and for raising good birds it is what I like to have them do. About forty young resulted from the first round. In the second round I did not have any clear eggs, and things looked very promising for about sixty young ones, when the weather turned cold at nights, from the beginning of May until June 15 I lost over thirty young birds, the first night after they left the nest. In nests that had one or two green birds these would pull through, showing that the green bird is much stronger than the light or buff one. Some of the hens did not lay the third time, some laid three, and some four eggs. Some had one, some two addled eggs. All the young ones of this round got along nicely, as the weather was warm and favourable for them, and they are now five and six weeks old. The old ones are moulting and feeding the young ones.

My "old reliable," which I bred in my own room, is sitting on her fifth nest of four eggs, having laid twenty-one eggs. The first nest of four young ones were dead in the shell, from the shock of unloading lumber next door; the second nest of five eggs and the third nest of four were both clear, the fault of the cock that moulted early in February, and did not fill the eggs. I then let her fly in the aviary and she raised a nest of four fine birds from the cock she was mated with first, showing that when you mate a pair of birds in the spring they will stay with each other all through the breeding season.

A Question of Productiveness.

As I am only experimenting I am going to see if she will mate with the same cock in the first round in the aviary next year; she gets off her eggs and helps the cock to feed the young ones, and is what I call a model Canary. I would like to ask, through CAGE BIRDS, how many eggs any breeder has known a hen to lay, as this one has laid over one hundred now. This is the hen that I spoke of before that laid 18 eggs and raised eighteen young ones in one season three years ago.

I am sure Mr. Tomlinson will be pleased to write an article on training the young Roller for the benefit of the beginner. A couple of years ago he wrote several good articles on the Roller and its training, and if the Editor will kindly reprint one of them on training the Roller it will be of great benefit to the beginner. I would like to see every breeder of the Roller write an article on his experience in breeding and training the Roller, for we cannot get too much information along these lines if we are to capture the world's trade for the Roller. I am glad to see the improvement in CAGE BIRDS since it has changed to a sixteen page publication, and I hope in time to see it a thirty-two page paper with a hundred thousand subscribers.

SOME ADVICE TO BEGINNERS.

By "BIRD LOVER."

AS so many new recruits are joining the large army of bird-lovers at the present moment, and as I am constantly being asked what is the best method of starting, I feel a few words of friendly advice may be welcome. I do not wish to pose as an authority, but simply would like to give a rough scheme which I have found from experience gives the maximum of enjoyment and profit, in the hope that it will help some initiate in one of the most fascinating of hobbies. It must of necessity be set out very briefly, but if any reader would like a more dtailed description of any part of it I should be very glad to be of service to him.

First of all, as every hobby entails an outlay to start with, decide definitely what this is to be. Do not procure your birds until all the accessories, such as cages, etc., are ready for use. It is false economy to use soap boxes and other substitutes for the proper housing of our feathered pets, and will lead only to disappointment later on. If suitable wood is procured from a dealer cages can be made cheaply and easily, and it will prove an added interest to the hobby. Full particulars are given in some of the CAGE BIRDS publications, and very little skill is needed in making a serviceable and efficient article.

Make Plans Beforehand.

Here let me advise the beginner to read as much of the literature on the subject as he can procure before making a start. There are many months before the breeding season begins again, and a few weeks given to planning out a definite scheme will save months later on, and probably pounds of the initial capital.

An outdoor bird room is always preferable to one indoors, but make sure it is properly constructed. Give the greatest care and thought to its fittings, so that it will eventually be a pleasure to work in and a place where no jarring elements disturb body or mind.

In procuring the birds I should suggest that the novice joins a society where he will meet experienced breeders who will not take advantage of his ignorance. Apart from the help he will obtain by this course, he will find it a valuable investment when he wishes to get rid of his surplus stock.

Do not on any account get more birds than it is possible to look after properly, and if at any time the duty of tending them becomes at all irksome make drastic reductions. The prospective bird-keeper should remember that by his second season the number of his birds will probably have doubled at least, so he should keep plenty of space for future operations.

In regard to the important question of whether or not he can make the hobby pay its own expenses, I have no hesitation in answering in the affirmative, and although few can make it a source of income, yet with average luck there ought to be a balance on the right side.

Where expense has to be considered the beginner should make a start with Canaries. Apart from being a patriotic duty at the present moment, the breeding of those birds is a most excellent speculation. His seed bill and all expenses for the year need cost him nothing if he also keeps a few pairs of Budgerigars. These are cheap to buy, their diet is very simple and inexpensive, they are prolific breeders, require no special attention during the breeding season, and there is a ready sale for the young. They are also most fascinating birds to look after and impart variety to the birdroom. I find that three pairs of Budgerigers will pay the yearly seed bill of six pairs of Canaries.

Birdy Literature for the Wounded.

In my work in hospital I have been greatly impressed by the eagerness with which all bird literature is received and read, to say nothing of the interesting discussions which often follow, but I am sorry to say there is a great dearth of such books and periodicals. A hospital ward is one of the most fertile fields for extending the number of bird lovers, and, as the question of capturing the German Canary trade is one of the problems of the day, I feel that much could be accomplished by the systematic distribution of such literature. Apart from the great pleasure it would give to numbers of our wounded "Tommies" I am sure it would prove a valuable means of accomplishing this difficult task.

I should venture to suggest that CAGE BIRDS opens a subscription list, and that it should be a point of honour for each prize-winner and everyone who benefits by advertisement to spare at least 6d. or 1s. as a contribution.

With the money such books as Mr. Claude St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which is one of the most wonderful six-penny books on the market, should be bought and distributed amongst the numerous hospitals. At a modest estimate each book would be read by 400 wounded soldiers in the course of a year, and would help to kindle the flame of enthusiasm in many. Each of those who decide to take up the hobby will naturally become subscribers to CAGE BIRDS, and in increasing our numbers we will be able to help an indispensable journal over a path which at the present time must be full of pitfalls.

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—
"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."

THE STOCK BOOK

Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

THE LINNET.

Few British songsters are more popular than the Linnet, and the class for this species at our bird shows is always filled with beautiful examples, which show the care which has been expended by their owners in their keeping. The specimen here illustrated won 1st prize at the show of the Metropolitan C.B.A. for its owner, Mr. W. Larking.

THE STARLING.

(Sturnus Vulgaris).

FAMILIAR alike to the dweller in the country and to the inhabitant of the grimiest of our towns and cities, the Starling is one of the commonest, and at the same time one of the most attractive of our native birds.
